Governor Walker's Letter of Resignation.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Dec. 17.

The following is the letter of Hon. ROBERT J. WALKER, resigning the office of Governor of Kansas:

WASHINGTON CITY, Tuesday, Dec. 15, 1857.

Hon. LEWIS CASS, Secretary of State:

SIR: I resign the office of Governor of the Territory of Kansas. I have been most reluctantly forced to this conclusion, after anxious and careful consideration of my duty to my country, to the people of Kansas, to the President of the United States, and to myself.

The grounds assumed by the President in his late message to Congress, and in recent instructions in connection with the events now transpiring here [illegible] upon his letter showing the dangers and difficulties of the Kansas question, and the necessity of my undertaking the task of adjustment. Under these circumstances, notwithstanding the great sacrifices to me, personal, political and pecuniary, I felt that I could no more refuse such a call from my country, through her Chief Magistrate, than a soldier to battle who is ordered to the command of a forlorn hope.

I accepted, however, on the express condition that I should submit the ratification of the Constitution to a vote of the people for ratification or rejection. These views were clearly understood by the President and all his Cabinet. They were distinctly set forth in my letter on my acceptance of this office, of the 26th of March last, and reiterated in my inaugural address of the 27th of May last, as follows:

"Indeed, I cannot doubt that the Convention, after having framed a State Constitution, will submit it for ratification or rejection by a majority of the then actual, bona fide resident settlers of Kansas."

With these views, well known to the President and Cabinet, and approved by them, I accepted the appointment of Governor of Kansas. My instructions from the President, through the Secretary of State, under date 10th March last, sustain the popular Legislature of the Territory in assembling a Convention to form a Constitution, and they express the opinion of the President, that

"When such a Constitution shall be submitted to the people of the Territory, they must be protected in the exercise of their right of voting for or against that instrument, and the fair expression of the people will must not be interrupted by fraud or violence. I repeat, then, as my clear conviction, that unless the Convention submit the Constitution to the vote of all the actual resident settlers of Kansas, and the election be fairly and justly conducted, the Constitution will be and ought to be rejected by Congress."

This inaugural most distinctly asserted that it was not a question of Slavery merely, which I believe to be of little practical importance then in its application to Kansas, but of the entire Constitution which should be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection. These were my words on that subject in my inaugural:

"It is not merely shall Slavery exist in or disappear from Kansas, but shall the great principles of self-government and State sovereignty be maintained or subverted."

In that inaugural I proceed further to say, the people "may by a subsequent vote defeat the ratification of the Constitution." I designate this "a great Constitutional right," and add "that the Convention is the servant and not the master of the people." In my official dispatch to you of the 2d June last, a copy of that inaugural address was transmitted to you for the further information of the President and his Cabinet. No exception was ever taken to any portion of that address. On the contrary, it was distinctly admitted by the President in his message, with commendable frankness, that my instructions in favor of a submission of the Constitution to a vote of the people, were "general and unqualified." By that inaugural and a subsequent address, I was pledged to the people of Kansas to oppose, by all lawful means, the adoption of any Constitution which was not fairly and fully submitted to their vote for ratification or rejection.

These pledges I cannot recall or violate without personal dishonor and the abandonment of fundamental principles, and therefore it is impossible for me to support what is called the Lecompton Constitution, because it is not submitted to a vote of the people for ratification or rejection. I have ever uniformly maintained the principle that sovereignty is vested exclusively in the people of each State, and that it pertains to them and their election in forming a State Government and State Constitution. This highest act of sovereignty, in my judgment, can only be performed by the people themselves, and cannot be delegated to Conventions or other intermediate bodies.

Indeed the whole doctrine of the sovereignty of Conventions, as distinct from that of the people, of conventional or delegated sovereignty as contradistinguished from State or popular sovereignty, has ever been discarded by me, and was never heard of to my knowledge during the great canvass of 1856. Indeed this is the great principle of State sovereignty, maintained by the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions of 1798-9, sustained by the people in the great political revolution of 1800, and embodied in that amendment to the Federal Constitution adopted under the auspices of Mr. JEFFERSON declaring that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. The reservation to "the States" is an express recognition of the sovereignty of the States in exercising the powers granted by their State Constitutions, and the reservation to "the people" is to the people of the several States, assembled in Conventions, exercising the sovereign right of framing or amending their State Constitutions. This view was set forth in my inaugural address delivered at Natchez, Miss., in January last, against the nullification, which speech received the complimentary mention of the great and good Madison, the venerable father of our Constitution, in a letter from Hon. CHAUNCEY J. INGERSOLL, of Philadelphia, as published in the Globe at Washington, in note. By the theory of Federal Government sovereignty of the people, each State in sovereignty reserved, and especially their own exclusive right, to form in its entirety their own State Constitution.

I shall not enter fully into the argument of this question at this period, but will merely state that this is the position I have ever occupied, and my reasons for maintaining this position are clearly and distinctly set forth in a printed pamphlet, published over my signature on the 19th June, 1856, and then extensively circulated, from which I quote as follows:

"Under our confederate system, sovereignty is that highest political power which, at the formation of governments and delegation of authority to them, is divisibly granted to them, but not parted with. Sovereignty granted is not lost by granting it; it might extinguish itself by making the exercise of its will the equal or superior of its creature. Sovereignty makes constitutions, and through them establishes governments. It delegates certain powers, distributing the exercise of the granted powers among the legislative, executive and judicial departments. The constitution is not sovereign, because it is created by sovereignty. The government is not sovereign, for the same reason, much less any department of that government."

Having defined "sovereignty," we must not confound the power with its source, or its exercise. That is, sovereignty is one thing, and where it resides or how it is to be exercised, is another. Under the system of European despotisms sovereignty was claimed to reside in kings and emperors, under the monstrous idea of the "divine right of kings," and the blasphemous doctrine was, that sovereigns, in legitimate succession, although stained with crimes and blackened with infamy, were clothed by the Deity with absolute power to rule their subjects, who had nothing but the privileges granted by the sovereign. Such were the absurd and impious dogmas to which the people of Europe, with few exceptions, have been compelled to submit for ages, supported by the mere potent authority of ignorance and superstition. Under this theory the people were mere ciphers, and crowned heads and dignities, the sole representatives on earth of the governing power of the Almighty. Our doctrine is just the reverse, making the people the only source of sovereign power. But what people? With us sovereignty rests exclusively with the people of each State. By the Revolution, each colony acting for itself alone, separated from Great Britain, and sanctioned the Declaration of Independence.

Each colony having thus become a State, and each adopting for itself its separate State Government, acted for itself alone under the old Continental Congress. Each State acted for itself alone in acceding to the articles of confederation in 1778, and each State acted for itself alone in framing and ratifying each for itself the Constitution of the United States. Sovereignty then will us rests exclusively with the people of each State. The Constitution of the United States is not sovereign, for it was created by States each exercising for itself that highest political power [illegible] sovereignty. Sovereignty being powers granted by sovereignty. Sovereignty being this highest political power, cannot be delegated. It is indivisible; it is a unit incapable of partition. Hence the great error of supposing that sovereignty is divided between the States and the United States. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law, and obligatory as such; but a law is not sovereignty, but an act of sovereignty. All laws imply law-makers, and in this case those who framed and ratified this supreme law were those sovereignties called the States, each acting exclusively for itself, uncontrolled by any sister State, except by the mere force of its influence and example. The Government of the United States, possessing, as we have shown, no sovereignty, but only delegated powers, to them alone it must look for the exercise of constitutional authority in the Territories as well as the States, for there is not a single power granted by the Constitution to this Government in a Territory, which is not granted in a State, except the power to admit new States into the Union, which, as shown by the Madison papers, the framers of the Constitution, as first demonstrated in my Texas letter, refused to limit our then existing Territories. In the Territories then, as well as the States, Congress possesses no sovereignty, and can exercise only the powers delegated by the Constitution; and all the powers not thus granted are dormant or reserved powers, belonging in common territory to all the States as coequal, joint tenants there of that highest political power called popular sovereignty. It will be perceived that this doctrine that "sovereignty makes Constitutions," that "sovereignty rests exclusively with the people of each State," that "sovereignty cannot be delegated," that "it is inalienable, indivisible," "a unit incapable of partition," are doctrines ever regarded by me as fundamental principles of public liberty, and of the Federal Constitution. It will be seen that these views which I have entertained were not framed to suit any emergency in Kansas, but were my life-long principles, and were published over my own signature twelve months before my departure to that Territory, and when I never thought of going to Kansas. These rights I have ever regarded as fully secured to the people of "all the Territories," in adopting their State Constitution, by the Kansas and Nebraska bill. Such is the construction given to that Act by Congress in passing the Minnesota bill, so justly applauded by the President. Such is the construction of this Kansas act by its distinguished author, not only in his late most able argument, but in addresses made and published by him long antecedent to that date, showing that this sovereign power of the people in acting upon a State Constitution is not confined to the question of Slavery, but includes all other subjects embraced in such an instrument. Indeed I believe the Kansas and Nebraska bill would have violated the right of sovereignty reserved to the people of each State by the Federal Constitution, if it had deprived them, or Congress should now deprive them, of the right of voting for or against their State Constitution. The President, in his message, thinks that the rights secured by this bill to the people, in acting upon their State Constitution, are confined to the Slavery question; but I think, as shown in my address before quoted, that "sovereignty is the power that makes Constitutions and Governments," and that not only the Slavery clause in a State Constitution, but all others, must be submitted.

The President thinks that sovereignty can be delegated—at least in part; I think that sovereignty cannot be delegated at all. The President believes that sovereignty is divisible between Conventions and people, to be exercised by the former on all subjects but Slavery, and by the latter only on that question; whereas I think that sovereignty is inalienable, indivisible, a unit, incapable of partition, and that it cannot be delegated, in whole or in part. It will not be denied that sovereignty is the only power that can make a State Constitution, and that it rests exclusively with the people; and if it is inalienable and cannot be delegated, as I have shown, then it can only be exercised by the people themselves, under our Government. We know no sovereigns but the people. Conventions are composed of delegates. They are mere agents or trustees, exercising not a sovereign but a delegated power; and the people are the principals. The power delegated to such conventions can properly only extend to framing the Constitution, but its ratification or rejection can only be pronounced by the power where sovereignty alone rests, viz: the people themselves. We must not confound sovereignty with delegated powers. The provisional authority of the Convention to frame a constitution, and submit it to the people, is delegated power; but sovereignty alone, which rests exclusively with the people, can ratify and put in force that constitution, and this is the true doctrine of popular sovereignty, and I know of no such thing, nor does the Federal Constitution recognize it as delegated or conventional sovereignty. The President in a very lucid passage of his able Message, gives unanswerable reasons why the people, and not conventions, should decide the question of Slavery in framing a State Constitution. He says very truly, that from the necessary division of the inchoate State into districts, a majority of the delegates may think one way, and the people another, and that the delegates, or who the case in Kansas, may violate their pledges, or fail to execute the will of the people. And why does not this reasoning apply with equal force to all other questions embodied in the State Constitution, and why should the question of Slavery alone override and extinguish the doctrine of popular sovereignty and the right of self-government? Most certainly this is no sectional question, for it belongs alike to the States admitted or inchoate of the South as of the North. It is not a question of Slavery but of State rights; of State and popular sovereignty, and my objections to the Lecompton Constitution are equally strong, whether Kansas under its provisions should be made a free or slave State. My objections are based upon the violations of the right of self-government and popular sovereignty, and of forcing any Constitution upon the people against their will, whether it recognized Freedom or Slavery. Indeed, the first question which the people ought to decide in forming a government for an inchoate State is, whether they will change or not from a Territorial to a State Government.

Now as no one, who with me desires Federal or Territorial sovereignty, will contend that a Territorial Legislature is sovereign or represents sovereignty, or that such legislature, a mere creation of Congress, can transfer sovereignty, which it does not possess, to a Territorial Convention. This change from a Territorial to a State Government can only be made by power where sovereignty rests, with the people. Yet State Government is forced upon the people of Kansas by the Lecompton Constitution, and not against it. But, besides the change from a Territorial to a State Government, which the people alone have a right to make, in framing a State Constitution there are many other momentous questions included in that instrument. It involves all the powers of State Government. Where is the bill of rights, the Magna Charta of the liberties of a free people, the legislative, executive and judicial functions, the taxing power, the elective franchise, the great question of education, the sacred relations of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, and all the rights affecting life, liberty and property. There are also the questions of State debts, of banks and paper money, and whether they shall be permitted or prohibited. As all free Government, as stated by Mr. JEFFERSON, depends upon "the consent of the governed," how can it be known whether the people would assent to the Constitution, unless it be submitted to their vote for ratification or rejection. But if acquiescence can be presumed in any case, surely it cannot be in that of Kansas, where so many of the delegates violated their pledge to submit the Constitution itself to a vote of the people; where the delegates who signed the Constitution represented scarcely one-tenth of the population, and where, as you know, the organization called the "Topeka State Government" was made, and as a consequence, an inevitable civil war and conflict must have ensued, these results were prevented by my entering (not the Abolitionists, as has been erroneously stated, for my address was not to them, but to the people of Kansas) that in my judgment the Constitution would be submitted fairly and freely for ratification or rejection by Congress, and that if this was not done I would unite with them (the people) as I now do, in lawful opposition to such proceeding.

The power and responsibility being devolved exclusively upon me, by the President, of using the Federal army in Kansas to suppress insurrection, the alternative was distinctly presented to me by questions propounded at Topeka, of arresting the revolution by the slaughter of the people, or of preventing it, together with that civil war which must have extended throughout the Union, by a solemn assurance, then given, that the right of the people to frame their own government, so far as my power extended, should be maintained. But for this assurance, it is a conceded fact that the Topeka State Government, then assembled in legislative session, would have been put into immediate actual operation, and that a sanguinary collision with the Federal army and civil war must have ensued, extending, it is feared, throughout the Union.

Indeed the whole idea of an Inaugural Address originated in the alarming intelligence which had reached Washington City of perilous and incipient rebellion in Kansas. This insurrection was rendered still more formidable on my reaching the Territory, by the near approach of the assembling of the revolutionary State Legislature, and the very numerous mass conventions by which it was sustained. In truth, I had to choose between arresting that insurrection, at whatever cost of American blood, by the Federal army, or to prevent the terrible catastrophe, as I did, by my pledges to the people of the exertion of all my power to obtain a fair election, and the submission of the Constitution to the vote of the people for ratification or rejection. My inaugural and other addresses were therefore really in the nature of proclamations, so often issued by Presidents and Governors, with a view to prevent, as they did in this case, civil war and insurrection.

Now, by my oath of office I was sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, which I have shown, in my judgment, required the submission of the Constitution to the vote of the people. I was sworn also to take care that the Kansas and Nebraska bill should be faithfully executed, which bill, in my judgment, as heretofore stated, required that the Constitution should be submitted to the vote of the people, and I was therefore only performing a solemn duty, when, as Governor of the Territory to whose people my first obligations were due, I endeavored to secure them these results. The idea entertained by some that I should see the Federal Constitution and the Kansas-Nebraska bill overthrown and disregarded, and that playing the part of a mute in a pantomime of ruin, I should acquiesce by my silence in such a result, especially where such acquiescence involved as an immediate consequence a disastrous and sanguinary civil war, seems to me most preposterous. Not a drop of blood has been shed by the Federal troops in Kansas during my administration, but insurrection and civil war, extending I fear, throughout the country, were alone prevented by the course pursued by me on those occasions, and the whole people abandoning revolutionary violence, were induced by me to go for the first time into a general and peaceful election. These important results constitute a sufficient consolation for all the unjust assaults made upon me on this subject. I do not unduly [illegible] the support merely on the question that Conventions are not sovereign, and cannot rightfully make a State Constitution without its submission to a vote of the people for ratification or rejection.

Yet surely even those who differ with me on this point must concede, especially under the Kansas-Nebraska bill, it is only such Conventions can be called sovereign as have been truly elected by the people, and represent their will. On reference, however, to my address of the Sept. 16 last, on the day of the qualification question, a copy of which was immediately transmitted to you for the information of the President and Cabinet, it is evident that the Lecompton Convention was not such a body. That Convention had vital, not technical defects in the very substance of its organization under the Territorial law, which could only be cured, in my judgment, as set forth in my inaugural and other addresses, by submission of the Constitution for the ratification of the people. On reference to the Territorial law under which the Convention was assembled thirty-four regularly organized counties were named as election districts for delegates to the Convention. In each and all these counties it was required by law that a census be taken and the voters registered; and when this was complete the delegates to the Convention should be apportioned accordingly. In nineteen of these counties there was no census, and therefore there could be no such apportionment there of delegates upon such census. And in fifteen of these counties there was no registry of votes. These 15 counties, including many of the oldest organized counties in the Territory were entirely disfranchised, and did not give, (by no fault of their own,) could not give a solitary vote for the delegates to the Convention. This result was superinduced by the fact that the Territorial Legislature appointed all the Sheriffs and Probate Judges in all these counties, to whom was assigned the duty by law of making this census and registry. These officers were political partizans, dissenting from the views and opinions of the people of these counties, as was proved by the election in October last. These officers, from want of funds, as they alleged, neglected or refused to take any census or make any registry in these counties; and, therefore, they were entirely disfranchisnd and could not, and did not, give a single vote at the election for Delegates to the Constitutional Convention. And I wish to call attention to a distinction which will appear in my inaugural address in reference to those counties where the voters were fairly registered and did not vote. In such counties where full and free opportunity was given to register and vote, and they did not choose to exercise such a privilege. The question is very different from those counties where there was no census or registry, and no vote was given, or could be given, however anxious the people might be to participate in the election of delegates to the Convention. Nor could it be said these counties acquiesced, for wherever they endeavored, by a subsequent census or registry of their own to supply this defect occasioned by previous neglect of the Territorial officers, the delegates thus chosen were rejected by the Convention.

I repeat that in nineteen counties out of thirty-four, there was no census. In fifteen counties, out of thirty-four, there was no registry, and not a solitary vote was given, or could be given, for delegates to the Convention in any of these counties. Surely, then, it cannot be said that such a convention, chosen by scarcely more than one-tenth of the present votes of Kansas, represented the people of that territory, and could rightly impose a constitution upon them without their consent. These nineteen counties, in which there was no census, constituted a majority of the counties of the Territory, and these fifteen counties, in which there was no registry, gave a much larger vote at the October election, even with the six months' qualification, than the whole vote given to the Lecompton Constitution on the 21th of November last. If their sovereignty can be delegated, and the Convention as such are sovereign, which I deny, surely it must be only in such cases as when such conventions are chosen by the people, which we have seen was not the case as regards the late Lecompton Convention. It was for this and other reasons that in my inaugural and other addresses I insisted that the Constitution should be submitted to the people by the Convention, as the only means of curing this vital defect in its organization. It was, therefore, among other reasons, that

Inasmuch, however, as this difference is upon a vital question, involving practical results and new instructions, it is certainly much more respectful to the President, on my part, to resign the office of Governor, and give him an opportunity of filling it, as is his right under the Constitution, with one who concurs with him in his present opinions, rather than go to Kansas and force him to remove me by disobedience to his instructions. This latter course, in my judgment, would be incompatible with a proper respect for the Chief Magistrate of the Union, inconsistent with the rules of moral rectitude or propriety, and could be adopted with no other view than to force the President to remove me from office. Such a course, it is alleged, would present me to the public as a political martyr in the defence of the great principle of self-government: but to go to Kansas with any such purpose, or with a certain knowledge that such a result must follow, would be alike unjust and improper. My only alternative, then, is that of a respectful resignation, in the hope that Kansas and our beloved country may be shielded from that civil war with which I fear both are threatened by any attempt to force the so-called Lecompton Constitution upon the people of Kansas. I state it as a fact, based on a long and intimate association with the people of Kansas, that an overwhelming majority of that people are opposed to that instrument, and my letters state that but one out of twenty of the press of Kansas sustains it. Some oppose it because so many counties were disfranchised and unrepresented in the Convention; some, who are opposed to paper money, because it authorizes a bank of enormous capital for Kansas, nearly unlimited in its issues, and in the denomination of its notes from one dollar up and down; some because of what they consider a Know-Nothing clause, by requiring that the Governor shall have been twenty years a citizen of the United States; some because the elective franchise is not free, as they cannot vote against the Constitution, but only on the single issue whether any more slaves may be imported, and then only upon that issue by voting for the Constitution to which they are opposed, and they regard this as but a mockery of the elective franchise, and a perilous sporting with the sacred rights of the people. Some oppose it because the Constitution distinctly recognizes and adopts the Oxford fraud in apportioning legislative members for Johnson County upon the fraudulent and fictitious returns so falsely called, from that precinct, which recognition of that fraud in the Constitution is abhorrent to the moral sense of the people. Others oppose it because, although in other cases the Presidents of Conventions have been authorized to issue writs of election to the regular Territorial or State officers, with the usual Judges, and with the established precincts, and on the adjudication of the returns, in this case unprecedented and vice-regal powers are given to the President of the Convention to make the Precincts, the Judges, and to decide finally upon the returns. From the grant of these unusual and enormous powers, and from other reasons connected with the returns of Oxford and McGee, an overwhelming majority of Kansas have no faith in the validity of these returns, and therefore will not vote. Indeed, disguise it as we may to ourselves, under the influence of the present excitement, the facts will demonstrate that any attempt by Congress to force this Constitution upon the people of Kansas, will be an effort to substitute the will of a small minority for that of an overwhelming majority of the people of Kansas; that it will not settle the Kansas question or localize the issue—that it will, I fear, be attended by civil war, extending perhaps throughout the Union, thus bringing this question back again upon Congress, and before the people in its most dangerous and alarming aspect. The President takes a different view of the subject in his Message, and from the events occurring in Kansas, as well as here, it is evident that the question is passing from theories into practice, and that, as Governor of Kansas, I should be compelled to carry out new instructions differing on a vital question from those received at the date of my appointment. Such instructions I could not execute consistently with my views of the Federal Constitution and of the Kansas and Nebraska bill, or with my pledges to the people of Kansas. Under these circumstances no alternative is left but to resign the office of Governor of the Territory of Kansas. No one can more deeply regret than myself this necessity, but it arises from no change of opinion on my part. On the contrary, I should most cheerfully have remained in Kansas to carry out my original instructions, and thus preserve the peace of the Territory, and finally settle the Kansas question by submitting my pledges to the people. It is not my intention at this time to discuss the peculiar circumstances and unprecedented events which have modified the opinions of the President upon a point so vital as the submission of the Constitution for ratification or rejection by the vote of the people—such line do I deem my course entirely with the President on this subject. Yet, moreover, widely my views may differ from those entertained by him on this subject—views which I have held all my life, and which, as involving fundamental principles of public liberty and of the Constitution, are unchangeable. Yet as regards all those great measures which I trust will constitute the policy of his Administration in other respects, it will give me pleasure, as a private citizen, to yield my cordial support. I have said that the Slavery question, as a practical issue, had disappeared from Kansas long before my arrival there, and the question of self-government had been substituted in its place. On some future occasion I shall discuss the delusion which has prevailed upon this subject, and show that after three years experience, when I arrived in Kansas, there were less than three hundred slaves there, and the number constantly diminishing—that, as proved by the official records of Congress, published and authenticated by those distinguished Southern statesmen, JOHN C. CALHOUN and JEFFERSON DAVIS, the Winter climate even of Eastern Kansas is colder than that of New-England, and that the Pro-Slavery Territorial Convention of Kansas, consolidated with the Pro-Slavery Territorial Legislature on the 6th of January, two nearly five months before my arrival there, did abandon the Slavery issue because, as set forth by one of their number, the Pro-Slavery Party was in a small and admitted minority, and the cooperation of the Free-State Democrats was invited as the only hope of success, not to make Kansas a Slave State, which was conceded to be impossible, but to make it a conservative Democratic Free State. Even as late as the 4th of July, 1857, when the Democratic Territorial Convention assembled at Lecompton, in consequence of the laws of the climate and the well-known will of the people, none contended that Slavery could be established there, nor was it until my Southern opponents interfered in the affairs of Kansas, and by denunciation, menace, and otherwise, elded at a critical period by several Federal office-holders of Kansas, including the Surveyor-General and the President of the Convention, with his immense patronage, embracing many hundred employes, intervened, and as I believe, without the knowledge or approbation of the President of the United States, produced the extraordinary paper called the Lecompton Constitution. Yet this act of intervention by the Federal officers to defeat the will of the people seems to be sustained by my opponents, while my intervention, as it is called, in obedience to my duty and oath of office to support the Federal Constitution and to take care that our organic law should be fairly executed by endeavoring to secure to the people of Kansas their rights under that act, is denounced and criminated. It is still more remarkable that the hypothetical remarks made by me, as regards climate in its connection with its influence upon the question of Slavery in Kansas after that issue had been abandoned there, which views for consolidating the Union between the conservative, the Free-State and Pro-Slavery Democrats, so as to prevent the confiscation of the small number of slaves then held in Kansas, have been denounced by many distinguished South-ern Senators who, when the Kansas and Nebraska [illegible] that all persons in and out of Kansas, whether in public or in private life, may publish what opinions they please in regard to these questions, except the Governor of the Territory, who has so little power and no patronage. And now, be pleased to express to the President my deep regret as regards our unfortunate difference of opinion in relation to the Lecompton Constitution, and to say to him that, as infallibility does not belong to man, however exalted in intellect, purity of intention or position, yet if he has committed any errors in this respect, may they be overruled by a Superintending Providence, for the perpetuity of our Union, and the advancement, the honor and interest of our beloved country.

In now dissolving my official connection with your Department, I beg leave to tender to you my thanks for your constant courtesy and kindness.

Most respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) R. J. WALKER.

New-York Politics at Washington—Interesting and Important Movements on Foot.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Dec. 15, 1857.

A leading topic of conversation in political circles for a few days past, has been the removal of JOHN MCKEON, Esq., for the alleged cause of active participation in the recent election in New-York, of the Democratic Mayor—TIEMANN, and the repudiation by him—a Government official—of a "regular" nomination. No particular sympathy exists for McKEON per se—who has been in office all his life, and who by removal has obtained a new status in the Democratic party, as a martyr, which he could not have otherwise obtained during the remainder of his life. But the principle involved in the case is very generally condemned by all considerate and intelligent Democrats—the fear being entertained that the President, in thus interfering in local town politics, may commit the same unfortunate errors that his predecessor did, by which the "Hard Shell" rebellion in 1853 became embalmed and consecrated in the affections of the independent Democracy of the State—followed by attendant consequence, another organized division of the party, reaching into the next Presidential nomination by the Charleston Convention.

It is not believed that the President has ever thought of removing FOWLER, HALL, CUSHING and BUTTERWORTH, for not becoming the loud-mouthed champions of the election of so doubtful a friend of the Administration as the defeated Mayor, FERNANDO WOOD. If either of these gentlemen should be removed, as a New-York Democrat, I prognosticate such a repudiation of Federal interference in our Municipal politics as will be more terrible in its results to the organization of the Democratic Party in our City and State, than the foolish removal of Judge EDMONDS produced.

A strong combination of politicians has been recently organized in New-York, to make DANIEL S. DICKINSON the candidate of the Democratic Party for the Presidency in 1860—FERNANDO WOOD United States Senator from this State; and ANDREW SCHOLL Governor. The heads of the combination are D. S. DICKINSON, in Binghamton; FERNANDO WOOD, and Collector SCHOLL, in New-York City. The prominent subordinates in the movement are GERRIT J. TUCKER, Secretary of State elect; HERAT W. ROGERS, of Buffalo, (retained in some way to DICKINSON) FRANCIS FOTARY, formerly Canal Commissioner, and personally connected with the "Know-Nothings;" JOHN C. MAYNE, who was impeached while Canal Commissioner, but who has recently turned up a State Senator, under the favoring auspices of Collector SCHOLL; SURGEON D. DUBARY, formerly of Syracuse, and RUSSAS SCHOLL, the brother of the Collector, TUCKER as Secretary of State, and MAYNE and SCHOLL as State Senators at Albany, are expected to manage the Democratic minority members of the next Legislature, and they, the Democrats in the rural districts seem to believe that DICKINSON is the man for "Old Buck's" successor—that WOOD is sufficiently honest to occupy the seat of Gov. SEWARD; and that the loquacious SCHOLL "is a mighty good proper man," to succeed Gov. KING.

The Collector has been a manœuvrer upon the gubernatorial nomination for years past; and the combination.

[illegible] Constitution? If there can be any doubt as to its application to that case, it will be remembered that even the Mormons form a State Government and [illegible] to the Union that their admission is [illegible]. Under such circumstances, according to Mr. [illegible] they would become at once an independent [illegible] State, and remain so until reduced by force to a state of rebellion quite incompatible with the spirit and genius of Republican institutions.

I send you a full report of the speech delivered in the House to-day by Hon. S. S. COX, a new and very promising Democratic member from the State of Ohio. Mr. C. has taken bold ground in opposition to the Lecompton swindle, presenting a short, sharp and conclusive argument against the justice and policy of maintaining it. He was listened to with generous attention, and his speech will be read with much pleasure.

It will be remembered that during the last Congress an issue was raised with respect to the right of Mr. HARLAN of Iowa to hold his seat in the Senate, and every Southern Senator, except Yulee, voted him not entitled. He went back to the Legislature of his State, which immediately returned him. Subsequently two persons—Messrs. Rains and Fitch—came to the Senate claiming seats as Senators from the State of Indiana. Their election was duly filed for the precise reason on which the Senate had unseated Mr. HARLAN. That precedent seems to be cited in its perfect application to the Indiana case. The question was raised, has not yet been definitely settled, and has to be disposed of by the Senate at an early day. It might be supposed that there could be no doubt as to the result—and that the men favored Mr. HARLAN's ilpe because it was "the law," seem as a matter of course, be tested by the Senatorial aspirants from Indiana.

But that does not follow. They succeeded in securing a postponement of the decision until the present session; and, as the question upon the admission of Kansas, with the Lecompton Constitution, must be decided in the Senate by a close vote, the position of these disputed Senators becomes matter of great importance. Certainly if they are not legally entitled to their seats, they should not be permitted to vote upon either side of this or any other public question. Mr. FITCH said to Mr. COX, a day or two since, that he only wanted to retain his seat long enough to vote in favor of the Lecompton scheme. It is safe to presume that if these gentlemen can get the votes of every Southern Senator to keep them in their seats, in violation of law, they will venture to return the compliment by sustaining the Kansas Convention; but if they are to be ousted from the Senate, as seems absolutely certain, unless a number of Southern Senators now repudiate the principle they established in HARLAN's case—and have to carry their commissions back to the Legislature of Indiana for renewal and amendment, they will not venture to accept the position assumed by Mr. DOUGLAS.

[illegible] NIGHTINGALE.

[illegible] NIGHTINGALE is the youngest [illegible] and presumptive co-heiress of Mr. WM. [illegible] NIGHTINGALE, of Hunsley Park, Hampshire, [illegible] Derbyshire, in England. [illegible] generally classed in the British [illegible] the Miss NIGHTINGALE mentioned the [illegible] the Queen of England, and as [illegible] that royal lady privately entered her name upon the list [illegible] of the first British [illegible] place for nurses of Miss NIGHTINGALE, birth somewhere about the year 1819 [illegible] authors differ, that she was born at Florence in the year 1822, and received her Christian name from that fair Italian city. It is well known that she is a young lady of singular endowments, both natural and acquired. She possesses a knowledge of the ancient language, and of the higher branches of mathematics, while her attainments in general art, and in general literature are of no common order. The command of modern languages are of no [illegible] order; her command of modern languages is extensive, and she speaks French, German, and Italian fluently as her native English. She is said to have visited the various nations of Europe, and to have extended her travels to the Nile, to the furthest extent. While in Egypt she visited the sick Arabs, with whom she came in contact, and it was generally in her power, by judicious advice, to render them important services. Oriental, Italian, rich and popular, her influence over those with whom she comes in contact is powerful as it is gentle and persuasive. Her friends and acquaintance embrace a large circle, and include persons of all classes and professions; but her home has ever been her home, where, in the society of numerous distinguished relatives, she has ever shown the utmost attachment to her admiring [illegible].

[illegible] life she left—a life not only [illegible] existence privileged, [illegible] makes it useful to others, (the [illegible] to her nature,) to fulfill a [illegible] duty.

It was because she felt the sphere of her utility to be even larger than the one afforded by her affluent home, that she gave up that home. From infancy she had a yearning affection for her kind, a sympathy with the weak, the oppressed, the destitute, the suffering and the desolate. The schools and the poor around Lea Hurst and Embley first saw and felt her as a visitor, teacher, comforter and expositor. Then she frequented and studied the schools, hospitals and reformatory institutions of London, Edinburg and the Continent. In 1851, when the whole civilized world had a holiday during the Great Exhibition, and were engaged in parties of pleasure, Miss NIGHTINGALE was within the walls of one of the German houses, or hospitals for the care of the lost and infirm. At the Great Lutheran Hospital, established at Kaiserswerth, near Dusseldorf, on the Rhine,—an establishment out of which no person is allowed to stand for profit or as a nurse, except after having gone through an severe examination,—Miss NIGHTINGALE spent some months in daily and nightly attendance on the sick and miserable, accumulating experience in all the duties and labors of female administration. The gentleman at the head of that establishment, the Pastor FLIEDNER, asserted that since he had been director of that institution, no one had ever passed so distinguished an examination, or shown herself as thoroughly mistress of all she had to learn as Miss NIGHTINGALE.

On her return to England, she for a space became again the delight of her own happy home; but it was not long before her desire to extend her aid to those who needed relief prevailed to bring her forth. The hospital established in London for sick governesses was about to fail for want of proper management, and Miss NIGHTINGALE consented to be placed at its head. Derbyshire and Hampshire were exchanged for the narrow, dreary establishment in Harley-street, to which she devoted the whole of her time and her fortune. While her friends missed her at assemblies, lectures, concerts, exhibitions, and all the entertainments for taste and intellect with which London is the season abounds, she whose powers could have been appreciated there was sitting beside the bed-side soothing the last complaints of some poor, dying governess, implant governess. Miss NIGHTINGALE found pleasure in tending these poor, destitute women, in their infirmities, their sorrows, their deaths as their recoveries. She was seldom seen out of the walls of the institution, and she [illegible] the dying institution was saved. [illegible] accounts of the unfavorable state, of the additional rigors that the military were enduring from want of effectual hospital treatment, and from defective management in supplying stores and necessary relief. These stores at once an enthusiastic desire to rendy herself. The English, with their energy of resolve, where existing mischief demands instant cure, raised a fund which should furnish the requisite power to provide what was needed immediately without waiting for forms, and boards, and official obstruction, under the name of authorized organization. A subscription was set afoot; and in less than a fortnight the sum of $15,000 was paid into the Times office for the above purpose. The proprietors of that journal sent out a special Commissioner, Mr. MACDONALD, to administer this fund, from which thousands of shirts, sheets, stockings, flannels, quilted coats, and hospital utensils, besides large quantities of arrow-root, sago, sugar, tea, soap, wine and brandy were supplied. One of the chief points in which the deficiency of proper comfort and relief for the sick and wounded sufferers was felt, was the want of good nursing. To send out a band of skillful nurses was soon found to be one of the most essential of all supplies. But unless these were really skilled, more harm than good would certainly ensue; and, without experience, could effect little; and a bevy of incompetent or ill-organized nurses would prove an incumbrance, instead of an assistance. Now it was that a field was opened for the wider exercise of Miss NIGHTINGALE'S genius and philanthropy; and now it was that her admirable abilities were secured for this great object in view. At the request of the Right Hon. SYDNEY HERBERT, Miss NIGHTINGALE at once accepted the proposal that she should undertake to form and control the entire nursing establishment for the British sick and wounded soldiers and sailors in the Crimea. Indeed, it is asserted, that by a strange coincidence some of those coincidences arising out of urgent necessity felt and met at once,—she had, herself, written to Mr. HERBERT on the very same day, volunteering her services where they were so much needed. The task was one which involved sacrifices and responsibilities of formidable magnitude;—the risk of her own life, the pang of separation from her family and friends, the certainty of encountering hardships, dangers, toils, and the constantly recurring scene of human suffering amidst all the worst horrors of war, together with an amount of obstacle and difficulty in the carrying out of her noble work wholly incalculable. Few but would have recoiled from such a prospect. Miss NIGHTINGALE, however, met it with her own spirit of welcome for occasion to devote herself in the cause of humanity. Heroic was the firmness with which she voluntarily encountered her task; glorious was the constancy with which she persevered in and achieved it. The same force of nature which had enabled her quietly and resolutely to accumulate powers of consolation and relief for the behoof of her fellow creatures, enabled her to persist steadily to the end, and carry out her high purpose with a success, holy as it was triumphant.

On Tuesday, the 21st of October, 1854, Miss NIGHTINGALE, accompanied by Rev. Mr. BRACEBRIDGE and his wife, and a staff of thirty-seven nurses, set out from England. On her way through France, she and her companions were received with the most respectful attention; hotel-keepers refusing payment for their accommodation, railroads declining the customary fees, and all classes vying to show sympathy with their mission. On passing through the French metropolis, one of the Paris journals made a characteristic remark upon Miss NIGHTINGALE'S appearance, which, coming from the source whence it did, was the extreme of intended compliment and interest. The paper observed that "her toilet was charming, and she was almost as graceful as a Parisienne." On the Friday following, Miss NIGHTINGALE and her companions embarked at Marseilles in the Vectis steamer, and, after a stormy passage, they reached Scutari on the 5th of November, just before the wounded in the action of Balaklava began to arrive. Wise rooms which had been set apart for wounded general officers were, happily, unoccupied, and these were assigned to Miss NIGHTINGALE and her nurses, who, in appearance and demeanor, formed a strong contrast to the usual aspect of hospital attendants. Under such management, the chaotic confusion of the vast hospital was quickly reduced to order;—the wounded before left for many hours unattended, now scarcely uttered a groan without some gentle nurse being at hand to adjust their pillow, and alleviate their distress; tears stood in the eyes of many veterans while the soldier was cared for by his country, since little would leave the comforts and luxuries of home to come and tend him in his misery. But the surprising the fears which had been entertained by officials, that this new addition to the staff of a military hospital would not work well, Miss NIGHTINGALE and her nurses were "never found in the way except to do good." Whenever, as after the battle of Inkermann, crowds of wounded arrived, there was feminine ministry at hand to treat them; and when medical stores failed, or demand arose for articles not forthcoming, the Times Commissioner supplied Miss NIGHTINGALE at once with what was needed. If it could be procured by money in the bazaars or stores of Constantinople. This promptitude of Mr. MACDONALD in seconding Miss NIGHTINGALE'S exertions, deserves all praise; it mainly enabled her to carry out the immediate requisites of her plan. His own excellent letters, written at the time, give a most vivid picture of the difficulties she had to contend with, in the shape of ill-constituted arrangements, alone, besides other obstructions to her procedure. A rule of the service, which required that articles (needed for present use) should be obtained from home through the Commissariat, and a regulation, which appointed that a "board" must sit upon stores already landed, before they could be given out, will serve as instances to show what were the obstacles against which Miss NIGHTINGALE had to exert her energies of discretion and presence of mind. To comprehend the evils occasioned by such impediments, an extract from one of the nurse's letters will offer an example:

"I know not what sight is most heart-rending, to witness an looking strong young man worn down by exhaustion, and sinking under it, or others coming in fearfully wounded. The whole of yesterday was spent in sewing men's mattresses together, then in washing and sorting the surgeons to dress their wounds, and seeing the poor fellows made as comfortable as their circumstances would admit of after five days' confinement on board ship, during which time their wounds were not dressed. Out of the four wards committed to my charge, eleven men died in the night, simply from exhaustion; which, humanly speaking, might have been stopped, could I have laid my hands on such nourishment as I know they ought to have had."

In the article of hospital clothing, the same deplorable effects resulted from the delay and confusion which existed before Miss NIGHTINGALE'S remedial measures came into operation. The original supply of these articles, inadequate as it was, had been long reduced so low, that but for the purchases made with the money of the Fund, and distributed through Miss NIGHTINGALE, a large proportion of the invalids must have been without a change of under-clothing, condemned to wear the tattered, filthy rags in which they were brought down from the Crimea. A washing contract existed, indeed, but it was entirely inoperative; and the consequence was, that not only the beds, but the shirts of the men were in a state foul and unwholesome beyond description. To remedy this, a house well supplied with water was engaged at the charge of the Fund, close to the Barrack Hospital, where the clothing supplied by Miss NIGHTINGALE might be cleansed and dried. Her supervision had an eye for all needs; her experience had a knowledge for all that should be done; and her energy enabled her to have carried into effect that which she saw and knew ought to be effected.

In ten days after their arrival, Miss NIGHTINGALE and her assistants fitted up a sort of impromptu kitchen, and from this hastily-constructed resource, eight hundred men were daily supplied with their respective needed quantities of well-cooked food, besides beef-tea in abundance. They who are acquainted with the plan of cookery pursued in barracks, where all a company's meat and vegetables are boiled in one copper, the portions belonging to messes being kept in separate nets, will know how that food is likely to suit the sickly appetite of a fevered patient, and how invaluable a system which provided the needful light diet, prepared with due quickness, as well as nicety, would be in hospital treatment. This was effected by Miss NIGHTINGALE'S kitchen, even in its early operation, and it subsequently attained a degree of excellence productive of extensive benefit, scarcely to be estimated by those unacquainted with the importance of such details. Her extraordinary intelligence and capacity for organization showed itself in subordinate, as well as principal points of arrangement. In what might be called "housekeeping duties," she showed womanly ac- [illegible] of the surgeons, and the [illegible] in medical services, and Miss NIGHTINGALE [illegible] the actions of the [illegible] and the [illegible] with her own [illegible] succeeded in [illegible] employing their proper [illegible] and her own system [illegible] in perfect harmony.

It seems incredible that even professional prejudice should inspire men with such narrow-minded fears, and actuate them to such unworthy conduct; but more incredible still that the grand Christianity of Miss NIGHTINGALE'S understanding could not protect her from pharisaical attacks. It is truly marvellous, that a self-devotion so pure and so noble, that it spoke its own sacred spirit of piety and holiness, should require not only explanation, but actual vindication. In one instance, a friend had to write a defence of Miss NIGHTINGALE from one of these invidious attacks—a defence of her, who deserved universal veneration for her sublime self-dedication to deeds divine in their charity and goodness! While Miss NIGHTINGALE was still in the midst of her arduous task in the East, this was the letter which Hon. Mrs. SYDNEY HERBERT wrote on behalf of her absent friend—the friend of thousands of sick, wounded, and dying brethren at that very time:

"No. 49 BELGRAVE-SQUARE, Dec. 8, 1854.

"MADAM: By this post I send you a Christian Times of Friday week last, by which you will see how Miss NIGHTINGALE and her noble work. Since then we have sent forty-seven nurses, of which I inclose you a list. It is melancholy to think that in Christian England no one can undertake anything without the most uncharitable and uncharitable attacks; and had you not told me so, I should scarcely have believed that a clergyman of the Established Church would have been the mouth-piece of slander. Miss NIGHTINGALE is a member of the Established Church of England, and what is called rather Low Church. But ever since she went to Scutari, her religious opinions and character have been assailed on all points; one person writes to upbraid us for having sent her, "understanding she is a Unitarian;" another that "she is a Roman Catholic," and so on. It is a cruel return to make make towards one to whom England owes so much. As to the charge of no Protestant nurses being sent, the subjoined list will convince you of its fallacy. We made no distinctions of creed; any one who was a good and skillful nurse, and understood the practice in surgical wards, was accepted, provided, of course, that we had their friends' consent, and that in other respects, as far as we could judge, they were of sane mind and character. A large proportion of the wounded being Roman Catholics, we accepted the services of some of the Sisters of Charity from St. Stevens Hospital, Dublin. I have now told you all, and feel sure that you will do your utmost to set these facts plainly before those whose minds have been disquieted by these false and unjust accusations. I should have thought that the names of Mr. and Mrs. BRACEBRIDGE, who accompanied and are remaining with Miss NIGHTINGALE, would have been sufficient guarantee of the evangelical nature of the work. But it seems nothing can stop the stream of sectarian bitterness.

I remain, madam, yours faithfully,
ELIZABETH HERBERT.

On a subsequent occasion, in a speech delivered by Mr. SYDNEY HERBERT at Oxford, on the same subject, he said, "I recollect an excellent answer being given to a query of this kind by an Irish clergyman, who, when he was asked to what sect Miss NIGHTINGALE belonged, replied, 'She belongs to a sect which, unfortunately, is a very rare one in the sect of the Good Samaritans.'"

The Hon. and Rev. SYDNEY GODOLPHIN OSBORNE, in his painfully interesting work upon Scutari and its Hospitals, observes relative to these disgraceful animadversions upon Miss NIGHTINGALE, "I have heard and read with indignation the remarks hazarded upon her religious character. I found her myself to be, in her every word and action, a Christian; I thought this quite enough. It would have been, in my opinion, the most cruel impertinence to scrutinize her words and acts to discover to which of the many bodies of true Christians she belonged. I have conversed with her several times on the deaths of those whom I had visited ministerially in the hospitals, with whom she had been when they died. I never heard one word from her lips that would not have been just what I should have expected from the lips of those whom I have known to be the most experienced and devout of our common faith. Her work ought to answer for her faith; at least, none should dare to call that faith in question, in opposition to such work, on grounds so weak and trivial as those I have seen urged. That she had been equally kind and attentive to men of every creed; that she would smooth the pillow and give water to a dying fellow-creature who might own no creed, I have no doubt; all honor to her that she does feel that hers is the Samaritan's, not the Pharisee's work. If there is blame in looking for a Roman Catholic priest to attend a dying Roman [illegible] there, it will be [illegible]."

This gentleman's more particular description of the lady herself is especially interesting. He says:

"Miss NIGHTINGALE, in appearance, is just what you would expect in any other well-bred woman, who may have seen, perhaps, rather more than thirty years of life; her manner and countenance are prepossessing, and this without the possession of positive beauty; it is a face not easily forgotten, pleasing in its smile, with an eye betokening great self-possession, and giving, when she wishes, a quiet look of firm determination to every feature. Her general demeanor is quiet, and rather reserved; still, I am much mistaken if she is not gifted with a very lively sense of the ridiculous. In conversation, she speaks on matters of business with a grave earnestness one would not expect from her appearance. She has evidently a mind disciplined to restrain, under the principles of the action of the moment, every feeling which would interfere with it. She has trained herself to command, and learned the value of conciliation towards others, and constraint over herself. I can conceive her to be a strict disciplinarian; she throws herself into a work, as its head—as such she knows well how much success must depend upon literal obedience to her every order. She seems to understand business thoroughly. Her nerve is wonderful; I have been with her at very severe operations; she was more than equal to the trial. She has an utter disregard of contagion. I have known her spend hours over men dying of cholera or fever. The more awful to every sense every particular case, especially if it was that of a dying man, her slight form would be seen bending over him, administering to his ease in every way in her power, and seldom quitting his side till death released him."

Inexpressibly delightful is that intimation that Miss NIGHTINGALE gives token of being "gifted with a lively sense of the ridiculous." Possessing the exquisite perception of the pathetic in existence which her whole career proclaims her to have, it would have been a defect in her nature, nay a lack of the complete feeling for pathos itself, had she not betrayed a capacity for receiving humorous impressions. Humor and pathos are so nearly allied, in their source within the human heart, so mingled in those recesses whence spring human tears at the touch of sympathy, that scarcely any being deeply affected by mournful emotion, can remain insensible to the keen appeal that resides in a ludicrous idea. SHAKESPEARE, who comprehended to perfection every impulse of humanity, affords multitudinous illustrations of this close consociation of a sense of pathos and a sense of humor in the finest natures. That particular feature chronicled by Mr. OSBORNE in his personal description of Miss NIGHTINGALE, is just the exquisite point, to our imagination, that crowns her admirable qualities. It accords with an intensely beautiful account of her, that was related by Mr. SYDNEY HERBERT at a public meeting convened in Miss NIGHTINGALE'S honor. He said, an anecdote had been sent to him by a correspondent showing her great power over all with whom she came in contact. He read the passage from the letter, which was this: "I have just heard such a pretty account from a soldier, describing the comfort it was, even to see FLORENCE pass. 'She would speak to one and to another, and nod and smile to a many more; we lay there by hundreds; but we could kiss her shadow as it fell, and lay our heads on the pillow again content.' What poetry there is in these men! I think I told you of another, who said: 'Before she came there was such cussin' and swearin'; and after that, it was as holy as a church.' That consoling word or two, that gentle nod and smile in passing, were precisely the tokens of sympathy that would come with such homefelt charm to those manly hearts from a face possessing the emotional expression which we can conceive it, naturally to have, just the woman with just the countenance to exercise an almost magical moral influence over men's minds. We are told, eye witnesses have averred, that it was singular to remark how, when men, frenzied, perhaps by their wounds and disease, had worked themselves into a passionate refusal to submit to necessary operations, a few calm sentences of hers seemed at once to allay the storm; and the men would submit willingly to the painful ordeal they had to undergo." Noble being! Exactly that blended firmness and gentleness which makes a woman's nature so all potent in its beneficial ascendancy over manhood. Rough, brave fellows, that would have resisted like iron any amount of men's persuasion, would melt at once into submission at a "few calm sentences" from those lips of hers. We can fancy the mouth, capable of smiles, or quivering with deepest feeling, compressed into resolute steadfastness, as it persuaded the men into reasonable acquiescence with what was for their good, while betraying the latent sympathy with their every pang.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE is a woman for every living woman to be proud of calling sister; and she [illegible] one who would not disdain to allow the claim of sisterhood from the very lowliest of her race.

Long before Miss NIGHTINGALE returned from the East, she was urged to hasten back to England until she was wan and worn; although her health and strength were so far impaired that when a yacht was placed at her disposal by Lord PANMURE to admit of her taking temporary change of air in sea excursions to recruit her for further work, she had to be carried down to the vessel carefully and tenderly in the arms of the men, amidst their blessings and prayers for her speedy recovery—the nation's gratitude could not be restrained from its eager desire to bestow some public token of acknowledgment towards a woman, who, they felt, had earned so imperative a title to their affectionate thanks. A testimonial of some sort was agreed upon as the only means of exhibiting their unanimous feeling, and of permitting every one to contribute their share in the offering. But of what was it to consist? Sums of money to a lady in affluent circumstances, would be futile; ornaments to one whose chosen sphere was by the bedside of the sick, the poor and the dying, would be idle. Any gift to herself, who had given her most precious possessions, her time, her attentions, her sympathy to others was not to be thought of. In the first place, it was like an attempt to reward that which was beyond reward to pay for that which was a free donation, and moreover, Miss NIGHTINGALE herself distinctly declined receiving anything for herself. The only thing that remained then was to raise a fund for benevolent purposes, and to place it at her disposal, that she might appropriate it according as her own philanthropic heart and admirable practical judgment should think best. Public meetings were called, presided over by a prince of the blood royal, and one who had been a personal witness of Miss NIGHTINGALE'S grand work in the East; and attended by peers, members of Parliament, and some of the highest men in professional repute. They debated the question of the proposed "Nightingale fund" in the noblest spirit of consideration—consideration for the delicate feelings of her who was the object of this testimonial of a nation's gratitude, and consideration for those who were desirous of making this public proffer of their homage. It was decided that a "fund to enable her to establish an institution for the training, sustenance and protection of nurses and hospital attendants" would be the best form for this national testimonial to take, and a copy of the proceedings was sent out to Miss NIGHTINGALE. Her own reply will best express the feelings with which she received it:

SCUTARI BARRACK HOSPITAL, Jan. 6, 1856.

DEAR MRS. HERBERT: In answer to your letter (which followed me to the Crimea and back to Scutari) proposing to me undertaking of a training school for nurses, I will first beg to say that it is impossible for me to express what I have felt in regard to the sympathy and confidence shown to me by the originators and supporters of this scheme. Exposed as I am to be misinterpreted and misunderstood, in a field of action in which the work is new, complicated, and distinct from many who sit in judgment upon it—it is, indeed, an abiding support to have such sympathy and such appreciation brought home to me in the midst of labor and difficulties all but overpowering. I must add, however, that my present work is such as I would never desert for any other, so long as I see room to believe that what I may do here is unfinished. May I then beg you to express to the Committee that I accept their proposal, providing that I may do so on their understanding of this great uncertainty, as to when it will be possible for me to carry it out. Believe me to be yours very truly,

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

Thus minutely did this gentle-hearted woman enter into the griefs and wants of those only indirectly connected with her self-appointed work; in the midst of all her arduous duties, present and immediate, she could still find time for consolation and assistance to those at a distance, even in verriest details. Among all her anxieties, responsibilities, and more vital affairs, also, she found opportunity to attend to intelligential needs; for on one occasion, we find from a letter written in the camp before Sebastopol during the Spring of 1856, that "through the exertions of Miss NIGHTINGALE, a considerable quantity of school materials, such as maps and slates, was supplied to the schools." From her own stores she supplied books and games to cheer the dull hours of convalescence; and was foremost in every plan for affording the men harmless recreation. On her responsibility she advanced from the "Times Fund" the necessary sum for completing the erection of the Inkermann Café; she aided the active senior chaplain in establishing a library and [illegible] their leisure moments in their barracks in Balaklava at a time when there was no resource for the sick, brave small stores; she wrote letters for the sick, took charge of bequests for the dying, and punctually forwarded these legacies of affection to relatives; she studied the comfort of those who recovered, and had a tent made for such of them as were permitted to take the air, from the searching rays of an eastern sun,—moreover, enduring the mortification of a refusal of the hospital authorities to have this tent put up. Her activity of intelligence was almost miraculous; one of its personal observers, Dr. PINCOFFS, declares: "I believe that there never was a severe case of any kind that escaped her notice; and sometimes it was wonderful to see her at the bedside of a patient who had been admitted perhaps but an hour before, and of whose arrival one would hardly have supposed it possible she could already be cognizant."

And now the time approaches when her noble duty in the East came to a close, by the declaration of peace. The date of her intended return to England was kept a profound secret, out of dread of that publicity which she has ever carefully shunned. Not only were the day and the spot of her probable landing preserved unknown, lest the popular welcome that would have greeted her arrival should take place; but desirous of maintaining the strictest incognito, she refused the offer of a passage in a British man-of-war, and embarked on board a French vessel, passing through France by night, and traveling through her own country unrecognized, until she arrived at her own home in Derbyshire, on Friday, Aug. 15, 1856. The respect observed towards her evident desire for privacy is well expressed in some graceful stanzas that appeared in Punch for Aug. 23, 1856.

THE NIGHTINGALE'S RETURN.

BY MR. TOM TAYLOR.

Most blessed things come silently, and silently depart;
Noiseless steals springtime on the year, and comfort on the heart;
And still, and light, and gentle, like a dew, the rain must be,
To quicken seed in furrow, and blossom upon tree.
Nile has its foaming rapids, freshets from mountain snows,
But where his streams breed fruitfulness, serene and calm it flows,
And when he overbrims, to cheer his banks on either side,
You scarce can mark, so gradual, the swelling of his tide.
The wings of angels make no stir, as they ply their work of love:
But by the balm they shed around, we know them that they move.
God spake not in the thunder, nor in the crushing blast,
His utterance was in the "still small voice," that came at last
So she, our sweet Saint Florence, modest and still and calm,
With no parade of martyr's cross, no pomp of martyr's palm,
To the place of plague and famine, foulness and wounds, and pain,
Went out upon her gracious toil, and so returns again.
No shouting crowds about her path, no multitude's hot breath,
To feed with wind of vanity, the doubtful fires of faith;
Her path by hands official all unsmoothed, her aims descried
By the Levites, who, when need was, passed on the other side.
When titles, pensions, orders, with random hand are showered,
'Tis well that save with blessings, she still should walk undowered.
What title like her own sweet name, with the music all its own?
What order like the halo by her good deeds round her thrown?
Like her own bird—all voiceless, while the daylight songsters trill,
Sweet singer in the darkness, when all songs else are still—
She on that night of suffering, that chilled other hearts to stone,
Came with soft step and gentle speech, yet wise and firm of tone.
Think of the prayers for her, that to the praying heart came back
In rain of blessings, seeming still to spring upon her track;
The comfort of her graciousness to those whose road to death
Was dark and doubtful, till she showed the light of love and faith.
Then leave her to the quiet she has chosen; she demands

[illegible] no strewing from earthenware throats, and vulgar clapping hands.
Leave her to the silence and the calm she knows, that here shrinks
What are our earthly honors? Her honors are in heaven.

There was one practical welcome that Miss NIGHTINGALE could not but accept, and that was from the royal lady who was the sovereign head of the army, which had so long been the especial object of Miss NIGHTINGALE'S devoted care. A visit of some days at Balmoral, where the Queen was then staying, in highland seclusion and enjoyment, was spent by Miss NIGHTINGALE in the exercise of kindly favor; being treated, during her sojourn there, with the most marked distinction by her Majesty and every member of the royal family.

Since her return home, Miss NIGHTINGALE'S name has met the public ear but in quiet deeds of simple goodness, consistent with her whole course. Her own letters best serve to show the single-minded view that actuate her. When a decline was sanctioned by some of the workingmen of Sheffield, to erect a monument in that town to the memory of their countrymen who fell in the Crimea, application was made to Miss NIGHTINGALE through her relative, Miss SHORE, of Moorbrook Hall, requesting that she would consent to lay the foundation stone. Miss NIGHTINGALE'S reply was this:

[illegible] Lea Hurst, Matlock, Oct. 22, 1857.

MY DEAR LUCEA: The purpose mentioned to me in your letter has my deepest sympathy. It would have been most congenial to my feelings, as my sisters from the death-bed of so many brave men, to take part in it. I shall be with the men of Sheffield in spirit whenever they execute their proposed plan. It is with real pain that I feel compelled to decline the privilege which they offer me, of laying the first stone. But I believe I shall best honor the memory of those brave dead by abstaining from appearing to court that publicity which I consider to have been my greatest impediment in the work I have been engaged in for their sakes; impeding it by arousing in some minds care for worldly distinctions. I shall ask you to give this letter to Mr. Ovearam; and I should be glad that Mr. Ovearam should make known to those who had expressed a desire that I should lay the first stone, my reasons and my sorrow for not doing so; and I should say also that I feel an especial regret in declining this at Sheffield, from old and dear family recollections connected with the place. I must apologize for so late an answer, as I have only just returned home.

Pray believe me, my dear Lucea,
Very truly yours,
FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

Enclosed was a check for £20 towards the object proposed.

These letters of Miss NIGHTINGALE are singularly auto-characteristic; they exhibit that beautiful union of vigor and gentleness, firm decision and quiet modesty, fine judgment and enthusiastic feeling, which compose her womanly character.

A striking instance of the right-minded firmness and spirit she could display when occasion demanded self-assertion, is contained in a letter which accompanied the one that she wrote from Scutari, accepting the original proposal of the "Nightingale Fund." The remarks in this subjoined letter appeared to the Committee (to use their own expression,) "so replete with sound common sense, that they used the permission they had received to quote them." These are her words:

"The confidence which the subscribers to this fund have shown me has been so generous and extraordinary that it is perhaps hardly necessary for me to allude to a very natural letter, which I am told has been printed, to the effect that I must forward a prospectus of what I am going to do, before I can expect to have money subscribed to it. I think this perfectly reasonable if I originally had asked for the money, which of course I did not. But to furnish a cut-and-dried prospectus of my plans, situated as I am here, when I cannot look forward a month, much less a year, is what I would not if I could, and could not if I would. I would not if I could, because everything which succeeds is not the production of a scheme of rules and regulations made beforehand, but of a mind observing and adapting itself to wants and events. I could not if I would, because it is simply impossible to find time in the midst of one overpowering work to digest and concoct another; and if it could be done it would be simply bad, and to be hereafter altered or destroyed."

In these few pithy sentences lies the clue to understand much that is almost incomprehensible, in the wondrous magnitude, difficulty and complication of the work that Miss NIGHTINGALE achieved. She possesses that mind capable of "observing and adapting itself to wants and events," the power of seizing at once the scope and necessities of emergencies, the vision; the courage and ability to meet them; and the faculty of [illegible] attention upon [illegible] immediate doing. The being able to concentrate the whole thought upon the present act in hand, to cope with [illegible] and to execute it solely [illegible] the way to perform these [illegible] achievement. Probably [illegible] eye witnesses of the perplexities and difficulties that surrounded her—will ever be able fully to conceive the amount of spirit toil as well as body toil which that truly called "incomparable woman" went through, while carrying out her great design in the East; and, therefore, it is next to impossible duly to estimate the true bulk of what she accomplished; but even so far as we can discern of that which she effected, it is a marvel of womanly achievement.

It was just one of those extraordinary tasks, entirely out of the ordinary course of events, that none but a woman could execute, yet that not one woman in ten millions could have performed. It required a woman's tenderness, a woman's delicacy, a woman's instinct of discernment in its nursing ministry; while it required the intellect, the moral command, and the nerve, rarely to be found united in woman, necessary to meet the multifarious difficulties it involved.

The grand point in Miss NIGHTINGALE'S character is this rare combination of invincible spirit and softest charity. Her high spirit is of the noblest sort; it gives her perfect control over herself and others, temper, patience, endurance in herself, courage, firmness, influence with others. Her charity is of the largest kind; it includes forbearance, gentleness, loving sympathy with all her human brethren. It inspired her with the divine desire to soothe care, to minister to sickness, to cheer and console death itself; it taught her how to alleviate distress in the living, and even how best to comfort survivors.

The liberal-minded, as well as liberal-hearted, way in which this lady confers her benevolences, may be illustrated by the following incident and letter. There is a charitable institution in France, called the Œuvre de Notre Dame D'Orient, under the direction of the Abbé LEGENDRE, almoner of the Hospital of Bourbonne-les-bains, a town where a great number of military men are accustomed to resort every year for the benefit of the waters. On the formation of a relief fund, destined to ameliorate the condition of infirm soldiers after they are discharged from the hospital, Miss NIGHTINGALE forwarded her donation of a hundred francs through Lady FOX STRANGWAYS, widow of the General who was killed at Inkermann, the donation being accompanied by this letter, addressed to the Abbe LEGENDRE:

SIR: I feel the warmest sympathy with you in the touching object of your work, and I am happy to join in it to the limited extent which my own engagements allow. I received, too, from the excellent religious ladies who were attached to the French army in the East, so mank tokens of their friendship, they gave me their assistance with such entire self-denial, and lightened my hard task in the hospitals with so much devotedness, that I shall always seek any opportunity of showing my gratitude to France, and to her brave children, whom I have been taught by those ladies to love and respect.

I am Sir, yours truly,
FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

From slight but significant circumstances, constantly transpiring, the public may gather how faithfully and steadily Miss NIGHTINGALE is persevering in the lofty course she has adopted as that of her life's aim. They find that she is quietly adding to those stores of practical knowledge and experience, which she has hitherto so effectively devoted to the service of her suffering fellow creatures, and which she evidently purposes dedicating to their cause, when the "Nightingale Fund" shall have placed munificent means at her command for the farther carrying out of her vast design. By occasional tidings of her movements we find her occupied in visiting surgical hospitals, examining medical wards, inspecting infirmaries and continually treasuring up fresh opportunities for observation and administration. Like a truly great and modest mind—here never thinks it can cease to learn.

With such a nature,—at once so humble, yet so valiant, so tender, yet powerful and energetic, so devoted, so firm and so liberal, Miss NIGHTINGALE will doubtless effect beneficial results to her species now unforeseen in their full extent. She who appropriated her own fortune with a lavish hand to the work she had undertaken, will assuredly distribute with judicious outlay sums of large amount committed to her disposal.

God direct and speed her in her new task, as He manifestly guided and protected her through the previous one! His blessing rests upon such single-souled beings as FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE; and it visibly resuscitates through the multiplied blessings His grace enables her to shed upon mankind.

Not only in the direct benefits conferred by such a woman as Miss NIGHTINGALE does her sacred commission stand revealed; but in the indirect effects [illegible] ...

[illegible] Fire-proof Safes.—Sherwood Fraud—Arrest of a Bankrupt.

The Chicago Press of the 15th says: "About [illegible] robbed of a considerable sum of money at Toledo, on the 11th. [illegible] circumstances: A collecting agent of the house of [illegible] Toledo, and having [illegible] the sum of $300 in [illegible] the hands of Gaylord [illegible] agent, he was forwarded to this city. This was on Sunday morning. On Sunday evening, Jones went with his wife to a neighboring house, and left, leaving the money locked up in a trunk. On their return they found (as they stated) that the house had been broken into, the safe forced open, and the money stolen. This version of the affair gave rise to the opinion on the Express Company in this city, that Sherwood engaged G. B. Ramsay to assist in the matter. Mr. BELDEN sent a detective to Toledo, who proceeded to examine the house of Jones, and found that the back door had been broken open by forcing on the lock, and the trunk, which was said to contain the money, had been forcibly opened and considerably broken on the outside. There were some circumstances, however, which led the detective to suspect that the burglar, whoever he might be, had broken open the door from the inside, instead of the outside. The greater injury done to its fastenings appeared to be on that side. This suspicion gave rise to a rumor that the Express agent himself might know more about the matter than he had yet thought proper to tell.

After fully satisfying himself on the point, Jones and his wife were both arrested and brought to this city. They, however, persisted in denying all knowledge of the matter, reiterated their statement in regard to the burglary, and could be made to say nothing further. If guilty, the secret was locked in their own breasts, where they seemed determined to keep it. At length, strategem was resorted to. The detective, receiving full liberty to act at his own discretion, proceeded cautiously to propose a division of the spoils, hoping out so as to induce the first half [illegible] (Jones) could never make use of the money himself without incurring imminent risk of detection, as BEARDLEY was satisfied of his guilt and was determined to keep watch of him. In this way, Jones was induced to reveal to the detective that the money might be found buried near his house in Toledo. The detective accordingly proceeded to the spot and on making search, found the money buried in a fruit-cellar. He returned to Chicago, but in the meantime Jones had left the city and gone no one knew whither.

Two or three weeks afterwards, a letter was received from Jones, mentioning the detective (to whom it was written) to forward Jones' share of the money to some place in Ohio. The detective answered, still pretending to be an accomplice, that he would come to Chicago to get the money, as it would not be safe to send it by mail. Accordingly, Jones and his wife made their appearance yesterday, were arrested, and sent to Urbana, in Champaign County, for examination upon the charge of larceny. The machinery which resulted in the finding out and arrest of the parties was certainly managed with great shrewdness and skill."

Southern Views of the Pacific Railroad—Attack on Senator Gwin.

From the Richmond South.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 13, 1857.

The recommendation made in the annual Executive message for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific by direct appropriations by the Government, is the subject of some serious remark, as so directly antagonistic to the economical views of other portions of the message, and so inconsistent in spirit and effect with the declamations of the President touching of the depressed condition of the public revenues. Mr. BUCHANAN is sensibly approaching the close of a long political life, and is naturally anxious to accomplish some great national [illegible] ...

[illegible] ... would be more safely and satisfactorily constructed.

Advices have been received at the Department of the Interior, which convey the intelligence that the Nebraska wagon road has at this time been nearly completed. A letter from Mr. Geo. L. Armstrong, superintendent of the road, dated on the 10th of last month, says that the party had been embarrassed and retarded in the construction of the bridges by the wet weather and snow-storms; but that he expected notwithstanding the embarrassments with which he had been heretofore surrounded, to complete by the 1st instant all the bridges from the Platte to Decorah City, with perhaps a single exception.

The charge which a sense of duty constrained your correspondent to make, in a formal letter, against the public honor of a member of the Senate, is a serious one, and it is due to the dignity of the body in which the Senator sits, that I should render some explanation of it. The facts, as I have stated them, are, that Dr. GWIN, of California, had passed a letter addressed to the United States Senate by signing a release in his collusive use of his entire share of Panama patronage, and that this engagement (though perhaps unobjectionable on the ground of public morals,) has been palpably violated by the Senator in making two recommendations for office in the Secretary of the Navy. So I charge the fact to be, and so the files of the Department will prove. The recommendations are in writing, over the Senator's sign-manual, one for appointments at the Navy Yard at Mare Island, California; and copies can be obtained, if necessary, to substantiate the charge.

I will add one fact more in relation to Dr. GWIN, by merely saying that it was hardly to be expected, from his antecedents referred to, that he would have ventured upon so public and pretentious a display of honorable sensitiveness as to have gone to the State Department and asked for an interview to protest his convictions that the Filibuster expeditions should be pursued with fire and sword, because of their prejudice to the public honor of the country.

Utah Matters—Captain Van Vleit on his Way West.

From the St. Louis Republican, Dec. 12.

Captain VAN VLEET, U. S. A., arrived in this city, Saturday morning, at 4 o'clock, breakfasted and was off again for the West at 5 o'clock, A. M., on the [illegible] Convention are the same as the last session of the Legislature, [illegible] for the organization of a State Government in view of the approaching Convention. Under the operation of all these causes combined, a census has been obtained of only nine thousand two hundred and fifty-five legal voters, confined to precisely one half the counties of the Territory, though the population, if correctly ascertained, much the larger part of the Territory.

At the election which followed in pursuance of the act, only two thousand two hundred persons, being less than one fourth of the registered voters, participated in any manner in the choice of delegates, either by voting for those elected, or for others. The average aggregate vote, in the counties, for the successful candidates, was about [illegible]

It is also certain, that in the election of the 15th [illegible] of Delegates to the Convention, the great mass of the people refrained from voting, and left the whole proceeding, with all its important results, in the hands of a very active minority, under the influences of the excitement which had been created, and the peculiar organization of the Territory. It is that could be done by the Territory, without the concurrence of a majority, to have the Convention, when assembled, to give the Territory a Constitution, it now has the opportunity to deny. It has produced all the evils and dangers of the present critical hour. It has left the Territory without a fair, and actually representative Convention of the people, though regularly and legitimately clothed with their authority, to determine for them a form of government and to settle the greatest part of its most important provisions from the test of popular judgment and acceptance. It has caused the present profound excitement upon the approximate question, that Congress may hesitate to admit the State under this Constitution, lest it be found to be the expression of a fundamental law in the election of which they have had no share.

But for what purpose, see it necessary, to inquire how far, or how, the parties into which the Territory were divided upon the proceedings in question, was justifiable in the course pursued. The only important question which seems now to concern the people, or their representatives, is as to the legal and political effect of the facts as stated, whether they do, or do not, impose upon the whole people an obligation to accept the work of the Convention, and to acquiesce in its plan of adopting the Constitution and sending it up to Congress for the admission of Kansas as a State into the Union.

If a Constitution, organized as this was, can be considered as embodying in itself the sovereignty of the people, the difficulty is undoubtedly insurmountable, and the exclusion of the majority to vote last June is past all present remedy. But, in my judgment, such a position cannot be successfully maintained. The fundamental principle of popular self-government, and especially of that "Republican form" which the Constitution of the United States guarantees to every member of the confederacy, excludes the possibility of the delegation or transfer of their sovereignty, by the people, to any authority whatever. In its very nature, that sovereignty which creates Governments and endows them with their legitimate powers, can be exercised only by the people themselves. It is incapable of alienation, and is as inseparably inherent in the body of the people as are personal identity and independent will in each individual.

The people cannot divest themselves of it, any more than an individual can divest himself of his own moral responsibility. Any other theory would involve the absurdity of the possible subjection of the sovereign to its delegated agent. For if the sovereignty be actually delegated or transferred, it may evidently be used to enslave the sovereign people themselves. If the Convention could make a Constitution, and put it in force without a ratification, it could readily adopt and [illegible] tyrannical provisions; for if [illegible] in this case, may be made perpetual, it might equally be made perpetual and unalterable.

In its essential character, when about to frame a State Government, the sovereignty of the people of a Territory is identical with that of the people of a State. It must necessarily be equally as plenary and complete; for otherwise, the new State would not stand upon an equality with the old ones. The perfect equality of all the members of the Confederacy is the very basis of the Federal Constitution. It is true that a Territory cannot become a State of the Union without the consent of Congress. But this discretion on the part of Congress does not imply the power to dictate institutions to the people of the Territory, or in any way to restrain, or limit, or force their sovereignty in the exercise of its high function of framing its own State Government. The only rightful power which Congress has in the premises is, to determine when the new community is sufficiently mature to assume an independent government, and to recognize the identity of the people in their new form of a State.

The clause of the Constitution guaranteeing to the States a "republican form of Government" imposes the obligation to protect the people in their sovereignty, and to prevent its alienation, if that were possible, as a departure from the true republican form. Congress, therefore, has no rightful power to accept a State Government, which has not received the sanction of the people who are to live under it. The attempt to exercise such a power would be a plain violation of the Constitution. It would be none the less a usurpation, because the people might afterwards regain their violated sovereignty.

The instances in which Congress has recognized and received new States, without the actual submission of their Constitutions to the vote of the people, are not necessarily in conflict with the principles now asserted. Doubtless if the people of a territory should quietly acquiesce in the adoption of a Constitution passed for them, they might thus give very satisfactory evidence of their approbation. But no instance can be found on record, of a Constitution accepted by Congress against the will of a majority of the people, expressed in any distinct manner whatever.

It is not intended herein to assume, that the people of the Territory are opposed to the Constitution which is to be submitted, in a certain form, on the 21st instant. It is sufficient for the occasion which now convenes the Legislative Assembly, and for the purpose of this communication, that there is wide-spread dissatisfaction, threatening to disturb the tranquillity of the people. If there be any means of preventing the discord and possible violence, which are so seriously apprehended, as the result of the partial and imperfect election authorized to be held at the time named, under the authority of the Constitutional Convention, it is the solemn duty of the Legislature to ascertain and adopt the measures most effectual for that end.

What appropriate and efficient measure can be adopted, in the existing emergency, is a question not without difficulty. Some have proposed a re-

Democratic Sentiment in Kansas.

From the Leavenworth Journal.

We learn that A. C. DAVIS and JOHN A. HALDEMAN, members elect of the Council, and A. H. ELASSAR, H. P. DEVINE, SILAS ADAMSON, A. R. BARTLETT, and one or two others, members elect of the House of Representatives in the next Territorial Legislature, are redeeming the pledges they made to the people of this county during the late canvass by opposing the Lecompton Constitution, not because of any fault in the instrument itself, but because it is not submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection. We are glad to see the Democratic delegates from Leavenworth take this manly stand.

NEW-YORK CITY.

The Board of Aldermen.

The Board of Aldermen met on Wednesday evening; President CLARKE in the Chair.

Alderman ADAMS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a Special Committee be appointed to devise plans, and cause to be erected, the Chamber of the Board of Aldermen; and that the sum of $1,000 be and is hereby appropriated for such purpose.

Alderman COUZENS offered the following as a substitute:

Whereas, The Legislature of the State of New-York at its recent session passed an act altering the Charter of this City, creating an additional branch of the Common Council of this City, namely the Aldermen of the Aldermanic District; therefore,

Resolved, That the room formerly occupied by the late Board of Assistant Aldermen be, and is hereby appropriated for the use of said Board of Aldermanic Representatives; and that the same be properly fitted up under the direction of Charles Devlin, Esq.; and that the sum of $1,500 be, and the same is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Alderman WILSON claimed that the substitute was necessary. The Legislature had created some Aldermanic Aldermen from Districts; but they had not abolished the office of "Ward Aldermen." These "Ward Aldermen" who had been elected for two years would probably continue to serve out their terms; and therefore it would be necessary to furnish a room for the newly elected "Aldermanic District Aldermen."

Alderman TUCKER thought the substitute ridiculous. It was well known to all the members that the room referred to was occupied by the Court of Common Pleas.

Alderman COUZENS agreed with Alderman WILSON in the views he had expressed, and he did so seriously, and after having received good advice.

The substitute was lost, and the resolution to appoint a Committee to rate the room of the Board of Aldermen was carried.

The resolution directing the Commissioners of Police to fit up portions of the Station-houses for lodging houses for the poor was called up again.

Alderman TUCKER objected to it. He preferred that the matter should be in the hands of the Governors of the Almshouse.

Alderman WILSON thought such an arrangement absolutely necessary. If it were not made, there would be great suffering and much crime committed by poor people before the close of the Winter.

Aldermen MCSPEDON and SIMMS thought the object would be attained more economically by putting it into the hands of the Almshouse Governors.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Almshouse, and the Board adjourned to Friday.

The Board of Supervisors.

The Board of Supervisors met on Wednesday evening, the President in the chair. The first matter of interest was a resolution offered by Supervisor MCSPEDON:

Whereas, The Surrogate, Hon. Alexander W. Bradford, having devoted many extra hours of labor, during a period of several months, to the examination of and the settlement of the case known as the Parish Will case; and

Whereas, In the opinion of the Common Council, he has fairly earned and is entitled to the fees accruing from said case; therefore

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby directed to pay to Hon. Alexander W. Bradford, the Surrogate, the amount of fees, for his own use and benefit, accruing in the above-named case.

In offering it Mr. MCSPEDON remarked that Mr. Bradford has raised the dignity of his office from that of a mere "office" to that of a highly-respected Court; and his decisions had been admired and quoted by the highest judicial authority. He had adjudicated upon the weighty matters brought before him, in such manner as to command the very highest respect of the people and of the bar. No one before him, and probably none who would follow him would command the same measure of respect that was felt towards Hon. Alexander W. Bradford.

Mr. TUCKER held Mr. Bradford in the highest esteem, and he would willingly vote for the resolution provided he were satisfied that it was legal. He moved to have it laid over to the next meeting.

Mr. JACKSON added his meed of praise, and desired that the resolution should pass unanimously. He had no doubt of its entire legality.

Mr. MCSPEDON had no objection to a postponement, in order to allow members to satisfy themselves as to the legality of the proposition, there being no difference of opinion about the fact that such a testimonial was deserved and eminently proper. He would move a reference to a Special Committee, to consist of Supervisors TUCKER and BLUM, (they being the members who had doubts as to the legality.)

Mr. DRAKE opposed a reference, believing the matter was perfectly clear, and the proposed recipient to be eminently worthy of the testimonial.

Mr. BLUM favored some such testimonial, and only desired to be satisfied as to the legality of the way in which it was proposed to do it.

Mr. CLANCY thought the Board was perfectly satisfied as to the legality of the proceeding, and there could be no doubt about the propriety of such a testimonial to one who had performed the unusually arduous duties of his office, with the great talent and industry, and gentlemanly urbanity that had marked the official career of Mr. Bradford as Surrogate.

The motion to postpone and refer was withdrawn, and the resolution was adopted by an unanimous vote. The fees will amount to about $3,000.

A bill for payment of poor witnesses in the Cangemi case, amounting to $156, was presented and ordered to be paid.

Petitions and resolutions were offered asking an additional clerk for the Superior Court and for the Recorder. The Superior clerk petition was referred. The resolution giving an additional clerk to the Recorder, at a salary of $1,000 per annum, was adopted.

The following resolution was presented by Mr. MCSPEDON, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Court of General Sessions is hereby authorized and directed to appoint the persons necessary to attend said Courts as attendants, pursuant to the provisions of section 26 of the code of procedure, in the same manner as the other Courts of Record in and for this County; said attendants to hold their office during the pleasure of said Court, and receive a salary of $800 per annum, payable monthly, provided that the number of attendants shall not exceed eighteen. The appointment of each of such attendants shall be in writing, signed by the Recorder and City Judge, and shall be filed with the Comptroller of the City.

The Board then adjourned to Monday night.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Wednesday afternoon, the President, J. N. PHILLIPS, Esq., in the Chair.

THE WOMAN'S HOSPITAL.

Councilman OTTERSON stated that he was too unwell to remain, and would ask, as a matter of privilege, permission to present the report of the Committee on the Woman's Hospital, and have the same referred to the Committee of the Whole. The request was granted. Attached to the report is the annexed resolution:

Resolved, That the Counsel to the Corporation be and he is hereby directed to apply to the Legislature of the State of New-York, at their next session, in the name and by the authority of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, for the passage of an act giving or authorizing this Corporation to give the block of ground bounded by Fourth-avenue, Forty-ninth-street, Lexington-avenue and Fiftieth-street, containing thirty-two lots or thereabouts, the same, upon the payment of one dollar lawful currency of the United States, to be conveyed for the use and occupation forever of the New-York State Woman's Hospital, the memorial of which is appended to this report.

Mr. OTTERSON had prepared the following remarks in support of the report:

For myself, I can say that I am tolerably familiar with the working of this Institution, from its earliest beginning. I have watched its progress with no little solicitude, and from time to time have had my confidence of its immense value to the suffering, and its importance to the City confirmed. The nature of the diseases successfully treated at this Institution, and which have hitherto never been successfully treated in any other part of the world, is such that we cannot spread them in detail before the public; but suffice it to say, they are a class of diseases of the most painful and hopeless kind, springing from the natural vicissitudes of domestic life, and bringing sorrow and despair to thousands of otherwise happy individuals and families.

Lest there might be any possible misapprehension in this matter, I will state that this Hospital does not deal, nor does it profess to deal, in any diseases which are the result of moral or physical crime. It is only for the virtuous and respectable of our mothers, wives and daughters. ### Democratic Sentiment in Kansas.

From the Leavenworth Journal.

We learn that A. C. DAVIS and JOHN A. HALDEMAN, members elect of the Council, and A. H. ELASSAR, H. P. DEVINE, SILAS ADAMSON, A. R. BARTLETT, and one or two others, members elect of the House of Representatives in the next Territorial Legislature, are redeeming the pledges they made to the people of this county during the late canvass by opposing the Lecompton Constitution, not because of any fault in the instrument itself, but because it is not submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection. We are glad to see the Democratic delegates from Leavenworth take this manly stand.

NEW-YORK CITY.

The Board of Aldermen.

The Board of Aldermen met on Wednesday evening; President CLARKE in the Chair.

Alderman ADAMS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a Special Committee be appointed to devise plans, and cause to be erected, the Chamber of the Board of Aldermen; and that the sum of $1,000 be and is hereby appropriated for such purpose.

Alderman COUZENS offered the following as a substitute:

Whereas, The Legislature of the State of New-York at its recent session passed an act altering the Charter of this City, creating an additional branch of the Common Council of this City, namely the Aldermen of the Aldermanic District; therefore,

Resolved, That the room formerly occupied by the late Board of Assistant Aldermen be, and is hereby appropriated for the use of said Board of Aldermanic Representatives; and that the same be properly fitted up under the direction of Charles Devlin, Esq.; and that the sum of $1,500 be, and the same is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Alderman WILSON claimed that the substitute was necessary. The Legislature had created some Aldermanic Aldermen from Districts; but they had not abolished the office of "Ward Aldermen." These "Ward Aldermen" who had been elected for two years would probably continue to serve out their terms; and therefore it would be necessary to furnish a room for the newly elected "Aldermanic District Aldermen."

Alderman TUCKER thought the substitute ridiculous. It was well known to all the members that the room referred to was occupied by the Court of Common Pleas.

Alderman COUZENS agreed with Alderman WILSON in the views he had expressed, and he did so seriously, and after having received good advice.

The substitute was lost, and the resolution to appoint a Committee to rate the room of the Board of Aldermen was carried.

The resolution directing the Commissioners of Police to fit up portions of the Station-houses for lodging houses for the poor was called up again.

Alderman TUCKER objected to it. He preferred that the matter should be in the hands of the Governors of the Almshouse.

Alderman WILSON thought such an arrangement absolutely necessary. If it were not made, there would be great suffering and much crime committed by poor people before the close of the Winter.

Aldermen MCSPEDON and SIMMS thought the object would be attained more economically by putting it into the hands of the Almshouse Governors.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Almshouse, and the Board adjourned to Friday.

The Board of Supervisors.

The Board of Supervisors met on Wednesday evening, the President in the chair. The first matter of interest was a resolution offered by Supervisor MCSPEDON:

Whereas, The Surrogate, Hon. Alexander W. Bradford, having devoted many extra hours of labor, during a period of several months, to the examination of and the settlement of the case known as the Parish Will case; and

Whereas, In the opinion of the Common Council, he has fairly earned and is entitled to the fees accruing from said case; therefore

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby directed to pay to Hon. Alexander W. Bradford, the Surrogate, the amount of fees, for his own use and benefit, accruing in the above-named case.

In offering it Mr. MCSPEDON remarked that Mr. Bradford has raised the dignity of his office from that of a mere "office" to that of a highly-respected Court; and his decisions had been admired and quoted by the highest judicial authority. He had adjudicated upon the weighty matters brought before him, in such manner as to command the very highest respect of the people and of the bar. No one before him, and probably none who would follow him would command the same measure of respect that was felt towards Hon. Alexander W. Bradford.

Mr. TUCKER held Mr. Bradford in the highest esteem, and he would willingly vote for the resolution provided he were satisfied that it was legal. He moved to have it laid over to the next meeting.

Mr. JACKSON added his meed of praise, and desired that the resolution should pass unanimously. He had no doubt of its entire legality.

Mr. MCSPEDON had no objection to a postponement, in order to allow members to satisfy themselves as to the legality of the proposition, there being no difference of opinion about the fact that such a testimonial was deserved and eminently proper. He would move a reference to a Special Committee, to consist of Supervisors TUCKER and BLUM, (they being the members who had doubts as to the legality.)

Mr. DRAKE opposed a reference, believing the matter was perfectly clear, and the proposed recipient to be eminently worthy of the testimonial.

Mr. BLUM favored some such testimonial, and only desired to be satisfied as to the legality of the way in which it was proposed to do it.

Mr. CLANCY thought the Board was perfectly satisfied as to the legality of the proceeding, and there could be no doubt about the propriety of such a testimonial to one who had performed the unusually arduous duties of his office, with the great talent and industry, and gentlemanly urbanity that had marked the official career of Mr. Bradford as Surrogate.

The motion to postpone and refer was withdrawn, and the resolution was adopted by an unanimous vote. The fees will amount to about $3,000.

A bill for payment of poor witnesses in the Cangemi case, amounting to $156, was presented and ordered to be paid.

Petitions and resolutions were offered asking an additional clerk for the Superior Court and for the Recorder. The Superior clerk petition was referred. The resolution giving an additional clerk to the Recorder, at a salary of $1,000 per annum, was adopted.

The following resolution was presented by Mr. MCSPEDON, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Court of General Sessions is hereby authorized and directed to appoint the persons necessary to attend said Courts as attendants, pursuant to the provisions of section 26 of the code of procedure, in the same manner as the other Courts of Record in and for this County; said attendants to hold their office during the pleasure of said Court, and receive a salary of $800 per annum, payable monthly, provided that the number of attendants shall not exceed eighteen. The appointment of each of such attendants shall be in writing, signed by the Recorder and City Judge, and shall be filed with the Comptroller of the City.

The Board then adjourned to Monday night.

Charges against the Late Street Commissioner—Fraudulent Means for Cheating Contractors—Mr. Devlin Again in Litigation.

PROCEEDINGS—FIRST DAY.

SUPREME COURT—Special Term—Dec. 17.

Before Judge Roosevelt.

Daniel Berrian, Jr., v. The Mayor, &c., and Charles Devlin.—This action is brought for the purpose of obtaining an injunction against the City, restraining it from paying the money for the grading of the Bowery, &c. It charges Joseph S. Taylor, the late Street Commissioner, and Charles Devlin, the Mayor-appointed Street Commissioner, with the grand rascal trick in the conduct of the matter.

In October last we published an abstract of the complaint. It seems that after the opening of the street for the extension of the Bowery, it was found necessary to change the grade of the New-Bowery and a portion of Pearl-street. Mr. Joseph S. Taylor, the late Street Commissioner, advertised for bids for the contract, and the following were received:

Jeremiah Haley, at 25 cents per cubic yard. Mr. Devlin was one of the sureties to his bids.

Peter Mourer, at 29 cents per yard.

Daniel Gallker, at 34 cents per yard.

J. P. Cummings, at 36 cents per yard.

John Mehan, at 31 cents per yard.

On the bids being audited, the contract was presented to Jeremiah Haley, at 25 cents as the lowest bidder. He, however, failed to come forward, and the Street Commissioner, instead of looking to the sureties for the loss sustained, immediately bestowed the contract upon John Mehan, at 31 20 per yard, thus jumping over the heads of all the intermediate bidders. This Mr. Mehan is alleged to be merely a "straw man," who immediately transferred the contract to Mr. Devlin.

The specification provided that the work should be completed in 30 days from the acceptance of the bid, but on Mr. Devlin's taking the contract, Mr. Taylor extended the time for 60 days more.

The work was commenced and Mr. Devlin ascertained that the intersecting streets, viz., Franklin-square, Cherry, Frankfort, Maiden, Vandewater and Pearl, required grading. He, therefore, circulated a petition to that effect, obtaining the signatures of leaseholders, boys and women, so as to make a goodly show, and presented it to the Common Council, representing that he had obtained the petition of two-thirds of the property-owners, as provided by the statute. The Common Council passed a resolution, authorizing the grading of these streets, and Mr. Devlin, without any advertisements for bids, was given the job.

It is now nearly two years since the commencement of the work, and although the Inspector has reported the work as well and properly done, persons who walk in that neighborhood think differently.

On the certificate being given Mr. Devlin, (by Mr. Turner, Deputy-Street Commissioner,) and presented to the Common Council, it was found that it contained a new item: "Fifty cents per cubic yard for earth filling," and that it then appeared that after the contract was executed, this item of "Fifty cents per cubic yard for earth filling," had been fraudulently interpolated in the contract book, in the Street Commissioner's office. This "filling-in" was the earth carted from the Bowery into the low places in the various streets abovementioned.

On all these facts the plaintiff demands an injunction restraining the payment of the money. He charges fraud as follows:

1. That the whole proceeding was illegal, as two-thirds of the property-holders on the Bowery did not petition, as required by law, to have the street graded.

2. In the putting in of the first bid, it being merely to divert attention so that it might be quietly withdrawn, and the bid given to Mehan.

3. That the Street Commissioner illegally awarded the bid to John Mehan, after the failure of J. Haley when there were other lower bidders than said Mehan.

4. That the certificate of the Street Commissioner was fraudulent and void, as it contained interpolations, &c., and false statements of the work having been completed.

5. That the charges for filling up the intersecting street is illegal, as no advertisement for bids was made.

The matter came up yesterday on the hearing. The counsel for Mr. Devlin made an appearance, and asked an adjournment, which being denied, he declined to appear and then left the room.

The various papers were put in by the plaintiff. It was admitted that no contract was made for filling the by-streets, but it was claimed that each street was a separate job, amounting to less than $250, (though the aggregate amounted to several thousand,) and therefore no bids were necessary. A separate certificate was presented in each case, and from them it appeared that each one exceeded the sum of $250.

The plaintiff then proceed to show that two-thirds of the property-owners had not petitioned for the grading.

Mr. Gervis Prince who did business at No. 251 Pearl-street, was sworn and stated that he had made a measurement of the change of grade on the street. The frontage on the street was 2,530 feet. The property represented in the petition for the grading amounted to 1,098 feet 9 inches. In the petition, included in the 1,098 feet, the school-house was included twice, having been signed for by two trustees. He proceeded to show the same discrepancy in the other streets. No. 11 Cherry-street was owned by Mr. Devlin, and he signed the petition twice, so that that property was doubly represented. Mr. Fitzpatrick (who is the assignee of Devlin's claim) performed the like act. Mr. Devlin also signed as at No. 21 Vandewater-street, which was not on the proposed line at all. The work had never yet been completed. A friend had been obliged, after Mr. Devlin had pretended to have finished the work, and the assessment had been made out, to remove 77 loads of dirt from in front of his lot, in order to make it passable. He had seen the foreman sell the sand excavated at two shillings a load. There was a hole left in Franklin-square, dug for the purpose of obtaining sand for sale. The excavation was left for several weeks. The hole was large enough to hold a coach and span. It was filled up by Mr. Devlin last Spring.

Michael Schaffner stated that he rented the building on the line, but did not own it. He signed the petition. It was presented by Devlin. Wm. W. Ellis and others stated the same.

Bernard Duffey, of No. 418 Pearl-street, signed the petition; was a property-owner; he went around with the petition; he knew of women signing it for their husbands, boys for their employers, &c.; Mr. Butler's son signed it for his father without knowing what it was for. In regard to the excavations, Mr. Devlin's men took up witnesses' gas and water-pipes and flag stones, and refused to deliver them back, saying that Devlin was entitled to them. Witness never could recover them. Witness saw Devlin himself, who told him the same thing. Witness had to take away several hundred loads of dirt, costing him three or four hundred dollars, from the sidewalk in front of his premises, and Devlin made affidavit that he had removed the same and charged the City therefor. He saw Devlin's son and his nephew selling sand.

St. John Osborne, second book-keeper in the Street Commissioner's Office, testified that Devlin and Taylor conversed together at length, about the time of making the contract, in the private office; they were very intimate; frequently notes and checks to a large amount passed between them; Mr. Devlin now occupies the residence left by Mr. Taylor on his death; witness thinks that he heard Mr. Rodgers (a clerk in the office) say that he

RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, Clerk.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—Special Term.

Before Judge Daly.

The People vs. John Muller.—Over five hundred suits having been already brought in the Court of Common Pleas by the people to recover against liquor dealers the Police penalty of $50 each offence for Sunday violation, a measure to complaint against one John Muller, brought up the merits of the law before Justice Daly. Messrs. Taylor, Egan and Ullmann appeared for the liquor dealers, and Mr. Hall, District-Attorney, for the people.

Mr. Taylor argued that the Excise provisions, as to Sunday traffic, being later than those of the Prime act, repealed them. He was proceeding to argue that public hospitality was uncertain, &c., but the Court stopped him on this point, saying that if the complaint was according to the terms of the act—his construction could not now be raised, but must be left to the trial. Mr. Taylor argued that the complaint did not set forth the special matter of offence according to the Code. Mr. Hall, at the request of Judge Daly, read the Statutes as to suits or penalties and the provisions of the Code. The Court intimating a strong opinion against Mr. Taylor's position, he withdrew it and confined himself to the point that the Excise law provisions repealed those of the Police. Mr. Egan argued at length upon the same point. He also raised the constitutional objection that the Legislature, since 1846, cannot pass a law which in their effect interfere with the free exercise of religion on Sunday.

Mr. Hall, District-Attorney, submitted the following points in support of the action:

1. The complaint is framed in accordance with the provision of the Revised Statutes relative to actions of debt upon penalties. 2 R. S., page 722.

2. And the Code has not interfered with these actions. Sec. 421 and notes to Voorhies' Ed., page 606.

3. There is no incongruity or conflict between the provisions of the State excise law and those of the Police act relative to Sunday traffic in liquor. The former punish the "sale" of liquor on Sunday by indictment. This provides for even private keeping. It is restrictive to the class of persons named. (MSS. decision of Recorder Smith in the matter of Paige, New-York General Sessions, Sept. 1857. MSS. decision in similar matter by Albany General Term.)

But the Police law prohibits all persons from publicly keeping, &c., liquor. The excise law passed last, provided for even private keeping by private sale—a different offence.

4. But if the offence were the same as to persons and to subject-matter, even then the Legislature may punish it both by indictment and by suit for penalty. People vs. Stevens, 13 Wendell, and section 7 of Code says: "Where the violation of a right admits of both a civil and criminal remedy, the right to prosecute the one is not merged in the other."

5. The regulation of Sunday observance is properly within the scope of legislative enactment. Late passim; and the two statutes thus regulating stand together.

6. The Revised Statutes on observance of Sunday, R. S. page 83, sections, 67 and 68, say "Expose to sale;" "On Sunday sell or dispose of." The recent provisions are no novelties. They simply supply existing deficiencies.

The Judge took the papers for decision.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS—Dec. 17.

Before Justices Osborn and Connolly.

There were 37 cases on the calender—32 Prison cases and 5 bail cases.

James McGuire was arraigned on charge of assault and battery upon Officer John Donaka, of the Sixth Ward Police, committed Dec. 15. The officer was about to arrest him upon a charge of destroying property when the assault was committed. Judge Connolly—What does he do?—The officer did not know that he had any occupation. Judge Osborn—He don't look as if he did much. (To the prisoner)—Well, what do you say?—The prisoner said the officer struck him without any provocation. Judge Osborn—What shall we do with him? Judge Connolly—Give him four months, I guess. Judge Osborn—We find him guilty and sentence him to the Penitentiary for four months. The prisoner went into prison with an officer, avowing that he was the injured party.

Frederick W. Wehrmann was accused of embezzling, at different times within the last two years, a quantity of jewelry, fancy cutlery, and other articles, valued at $50, from William M. Tiers. The complainant did not want to press the charge, and at his request the defendant was discharged.

Thomas Cullen, charged with an assault and battery upon Officer Andrew McConnell, of the Sixteenth Precinct Police, Dec. 14, was also discharged at the request of the complainant.

William Feiner was found guilty of assaulting and beating his wife Eliza, at their residence No. 77 Suffolk-street, Dec. 14, and sentence suspended.

Mary Kelly was found guilty of stealing three kidneys and two tongues, worth twelve cents, Dec. 15, and sentence suspended.

Frederick Reager had been committed on a charge of beating Elizabeth Reager, No. 123 Third-avenue, Dec. 14. The prisoner's name was called, but it was ascertained that he was not in prison.

Michael Skirrington was fined $10 for the luxury of assaulting and beating (Dec. 14) Bridget Flagherty, No. 24 Mulberry-street. He paid the fine and was set at liberty.

Patrick Ash, it was alleged, committed an assault and battery upon Thomas Meers, of No. 64 Washington-street, Dec. 12. He was discharged at the request of the complainant.

David Miller was tried on a charge of assault and battery preferred against him by Officer Elijah Caldwell, of the Seventh District Police. The offence was committed Dec. 14. Miller was found guilty and fined $5.

Hannah Brazan was a servant girl in the employment of Mrs. William Baker, No. 76 Hudson-street. She was accused of stealing at different times during the months of November and December, a silk dress, gold locket, gold pencil, ear-rings, chain and bracelet, and other property, valued at $67. It was proved that Hannah had the property pawned. She met a little boy, Francis Cheesbrough, of No. 147 Franklin-street, in the street and asked him to take the property to the pawnbroker's for her, saying that it was hers and she was sick and needed the money. The boy accordingly took it to the office of Messrs. Bryan, Cudlipp & Levy, Pawnbrokers, and pawned it at different times. Officer John F. H. Dezet of the Fifth Precinct Police arrested her at the instance of Mrs. Baker, who afterwards identified the property. Counsel claimed that the chain of evidence was not sufficiently strong to fasten the crime upon the young woman. The Court thought the evidence could not be stronger. Judge Osborn—Well, she's lucky to get off so. She might have been tried for a grand larceny. We find her guilty and sentence her to the Penitentiary for three months. The prisoner commenced to make a speech. Counsel—Now go off; you'll get something worse if you talk any more. She went into Prison proclaiming her innocence.

Mary Lynch was tried upon the complaint of Thos. Ulaney, of No. 187 East Thirty-fifth-street, who accused her of stealing about 15 yards of carpeting worth $6, Dec. 12. The evidence did not fasten the crime upon her, and she was acquitted.

Mary Byrnes was charged with stealing one muslin shirt, value $1, from Frederick A. Molton, No. 365 William-street, Dec. 14. She was discharged at the request of the complainant.

Catharine Ann Douglass had been arrested upon a

Ordered—That the Clerk give notice of the following order:

A new calendar of causes noticed for trial, will be made up for the January Term, 1858, for which notes of issue must be filed on or before Tuesday, the 29th day of December, inst.

All notes of issue, for that and every subsequent Term, must state distinctly the nature of the issue.

Such notes of issue, for January Term, shall also state whether the cause was on the Calendar at the close of December Term, 1857, and if so, shall state the number of the cause on that Calendar; and notes of issue, for other Terms, shall state whether the cause is then on the Calendar, and the number thereof; and if the cause has been marked "down" on the Calendar in 1857, it must be so stated on the note of issue, and the date thereof.

The Clerk is directed not to enter any cause upon the Calendar unless the note of issue shall be conforming to the foregoing directions.

Causes when a cause is placed on the Calendar, it will retain its priority so long as it is not the subsequent terms of the year. Such Calendar will be continued for the succeeding terms until the causes thereon are disposed of.

RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, Clerk.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

[illegible] Committee on Finance by Mr. H[illegible] [illegible] communication from the Secre[illegible] giving a recast of the contracts [illegible] which will be found elsewhere. [illegible] gave notice that he would call [illegible] the establishment of the Territory of [illegible] and on motion of the same gentleman [illegible] the President's Message relating [illegible] Utah. The Senate ventured a [illegible] Pastor, and Mr. Hamlin [illegible] Committee on Finance. In the House the [illegible] of Pennsylvania, [illegible] to the resignation of G[illegible] [illegible] Dallas, Wheatly and [illegible] [illegible] Gen. M. B. Lamar, of Texas, was yesterday confirmed by the Senate as Minister to Central America.

The South Carolina Legislature has refused to legalize the suspension of the banks of that State.

There was a meeting last night in front of the new TIMES building, called to sustain the National Administration. The weather was drizzly, and the gathering was not large. They were to have met in Tammany, but the Sachems would not let them, because, as they held, the meeting had not been called by the "regular" Democratic authorities. The decision of the Sachems was made known yesterday morning by the TIMES. At an early hour the platform was erected, but rather weakly constructed, for soon after the meeting had been organized, its bottom fell out, and dropped officers, speakers and reporters out upon the ground. Fortunately no one was seriously injured. The meeting then passed over to the City Hall steps, where Hon. RICHARD SCHELL presided, and speeches were made by Messrs. HOFFMAN, MCMAHON, ENGLISH, Coroner CONNERY, DELEVAN, and others, denouncing the Sachems and all opposed to Mayor WOOD and to the policy of the Administration, as expressed in the Message of President BUCHANAN.

The promised paper from Captain O. H. BERRYMAN, U. S. N., upon the subject of "Deep Sea Soundings," was read last night before the Geographical and Statistical Society, by Dr. HAWKS, the President, at the chapel of the University. There was but a small audience on account of the unpleasant evening. The first half of the paper was devoted to the expedition undertaken and carried out by Captain B. for sounding out the route for the telegraphic cable across the Atlantic, the facts of which have already been published, and the last part to his soundings in the Gulf Stream. The papers will be read again at a future meeting.

One of the Harbor-masters yesterday commenced a suit against Captain ALEXANDER ROGERS, of the smack Mary Rogers, for alleged disobedience of orders in not hauling his vessel, with sufficient alacrity, out of Blackball-slip on Wednesday night, to make room for a canal boat. Captain R. complains that the officer first issued his mandate in the dark without stating who he was, and that his manner and language were tyrannical and abusive; he also alleges that his directions to him and other smackmen could not be obeyed without damage to their vessels and loss of their fish. The smackmen intend to contest the right of the Harbor-master to turn them out of Fulton Market slip, which they have always occupied, and where the nature of their business requires they should lie.

In the Supreme Court yesterday the case of BERRIAN vs. The Mayor, &c., came up. This is another of the many cases exhibiting the wholesale plunder to which this City is subjected. After the opening of the street for the Bowery extension, it was found necessary to grade a portion of Pearl-street, the Bowery and Franklin-square. A number of bids for the contract was sent in; the lowest being for 24 cents per cubic yard, and the highest $1 20 per cubic yard. The contract was awarded to the lowest. The other contractors ceased to notice the matter, supposing it was fairly disposed of. The lowest contractor neglected to come forward, and the Commissioner jumped over the heads of the other bidders, and gave it to the highest,—who seems to have been a mere agent for CHARLES DEVLIN, and who immediately transferred it to him. DEVLIN went to work, and finally by a finesse dodge obtained a contract for grading some of the intersecting streets at the same exorbitant price. As if this were not enough, shortly after he was in possession of the Street Commissioner's order, it was found that certain words had been fraudulently interpolated into the contract-book in the office by which he claimed "fifty cents per cubic yard for back filling." This was the same earth which he was paid $1 20 per yard for removing from the Bowery, and filled into the intersecting streets. It was also proved that his agents took up the water and gas pipes, and flag stones from their owners' sidewalks, and carried them off, claiming them as their own property, and DEVLIN, when applied to in relation to it, answered that the owner had no title to them; that he was entitled to all such property dug up. To-day DEVLIN is to be examined, and he may be able to give a different aspect to the case, but at present it is as conclusive a case of fraud and corruption as is often presented. The counsel for DEVLIN applied for an adjournment, but not being able to obtain it, declined to make any appearance.

In the Court of General Sessions yesterday, a youth named PETER BARNES was convicted of a most daring attempt at highway robbery. On November 11, at the early hour of 6 P. M., an [illegible] was attacked by three fellows,—two of whom held him by the arms, while the third [illegible] his pocket. The victim struggled [illegible] and making an outcry, [illegible] A police officer attempted to [illegible] in arresting BARNES, but his [illegible] made their escape. The Jury yesterday promptly found him guilty. Sentence was reserved till the last day of term. SIMEON DEWITT, was charged with receiving stolen goods, [illegible] valued at $1,100, the property of [illegible] & SEARS, No. 167 Water-street. The testimony was not conclusive, and the Jury acquitted him.

In the case of the People vs. JOHN MULLER, in which the defendant demurred to the complaint charging him with violating the law against selling liquor on Sunday, the demurrer was argued before Judge DALY, in the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday. The Judge reserved his decision.

The formal decree in the Parrish Will Case was signed yesterday by Surrogate A. W. BRADFORD, to confirm the former orders.

Mrs. BERNARD VAN RENSSELAER, of Albany, had her pocket picked a few weeks since, while in a store in Broadway, of a silk purse containing some money and a $300 diamond ring. Search was made for the ring among the pawnbrokers' shops and jewelry stores of the City. It yesterday turned up in the possession of a noted female known as "Manchester Moll."

The General Markets yesterday were quiet, for the leading kinds of Produce. Flour arrived freely, and partially declined 5c.@10c. ₩ bbl., yet the sales effected were not very heavy. Wheat was inactive and somewhat nominal. A moderate business was transacted in Corn, at steady rates. Rye fell to 70c.@72½c. ₩ bushel. Provisions were dull, and prices trended downward. Groceries attracted less attention, at former quotations. In other branches of trade no really new features were discernable.

The Kansas Question—Mr. Stanton's Special Message.

We publish in another column Secretary STANTON's Message to the Legislature of Kansas at the opening of its extra session. It is a clear, manly and admirable document. If the Legislature will act upon its suggestions, and avoid the points of danger which it signalizes, we cannot help thinking that the whole Kansas difficulty will be peacefully and satisfactorily settled. Mr. STANTON recommends that they limit their action to measures for securing a direct popular vote upon the Constitution, which has been only partially submitted by the Lecompton Convention. In pursuance of this purpose he advises the passage of a law "directing an election to be held, either under existing regulations, or in pursuance of other suitable provisions to be expressed in the act, in which the people shall be authorized to vote for the Constitution, in either of the forms presented by the Convention, and also against that Constitution in both forms." This single act, he thinks, will be sufficient to meet the whole emergency and to repel the excitement which pervades the Territory.

As we have already taken occasion to remark, the wisdom of this Message is shown quite as much in its tacit warnings, as in its direct suggestions. The danger from this Legislature is that it will do too much. It has been widely assumed, both in and out of the Territory, that it would proceed instantly to repeal the act under which the Lecompton Convention was held, as well as all the laws of the "bogus" Legislature, and take measures for submitting the Topeka Constitution to the popular vote. In spite of the Tribune's dissatisfaction with our views, we still think that any such sweeping action as this would prove seriously, and perhaps fatally, injurious to the cause they have at heart.

In all such cases of entanglement, where there are faults and defects upon both sides, the only practical way of bringing matters to a final adjustment is by ignoring the past, sweeping away the causes of controversy it has accumulated and beginning anew. This seems to us a conclusive reason against dragging the Topeka Constitution, or the legitimacy of the Territorial Legislature, into the question at all. The Topeka document is two years old,—was formed by a party Convention, and has never had any of the forms of acknowledged law in its support. It was purely and exclusively a party movement,—just as much so as the Cincinnati platform or the Philadelphia resolutions. If it should be sanctioned by the popular vote, it would still be rejected by Congress, upon the ground that it was not framed by any body of men known to either Territorial or Federal law. It certainly is not wise for the people of Kansas, in their present position, to lay before Congress any Constitution to which such just and formidable objection can be made. Their object should be to present to that body an issue so simple and so clear that nothing but the most determined and resolute hostility to the principle of popular rights can be arrayed against it.

It seems to us that this result will be attained by adherence to Mr. STANTON's suggestions. Let the question be presented to the people,—whether they will have this Constitution, with or without Slavery, or not at all;—if they decide in favor of it, then there can be no good reason why Kansas should not be admitted under it;—and if, on the other hand, they should vote against it in either form, it would not be possible for Congress, without the grossest and most flagrant disregard of principle, precedent and policy, to force it upon them.

Whatever the Legislature may do, Mr. STANTON's action will give him a high place in the public estimation for the firmness, prudence and conservative moderation which he has displayed in this most difficult and perilous crisis. It is seldom that a public man has an opportunity to show his superiority to partisan influences and his profound regard for justice and the public good, in so marked and conspicuous a manner. The fact that Mr. STANTON was instantly ejected from office for the grave offence of having called together the representatives of the people in this crisis, will fasten public attention upon the manner in which he has met the emergency;—and we have not the slightest doubt that in the issue which the President has so hastily invited, Mr. STANTON will be fully sustained by the public judgment.

THE DEMOCRACY.—The meeting in the Park was not as magnificent a display of popular enthusiasm as it was expected to be. It was small in numbers, exceedingly feeble in oratory, weak in enthusiasm, and strong only in its brass band. The leading spirit of the occasion was our old friend Coroner CONNERY, who is sure to turn up in any case of sudden and mysterious death,—like those of Dr. BURDELL and Mayor WOOD. The Coroner managed last night's proceedings better than the [illegible] hardly lost sight of the Chief Magistrate of the Union. The friends of Mr. BUCHANAN can no longer succeed in covering up the issue between the Mr. BUCHANAN of June and the Mr. BUCHANAN of December under the pretext of a difficulty between Mr. BUCHANAN and Mr. DOUGLAS. Governor WALKER has put the speeches of the Illinois Senator into the mouth of the President himself, and has placed it beyond a peradventure that every word which shall be uttered in attack upon the positions taken up by Mr. DOUGLAS is a blow leveled at the character for consistency, capacity and patriotism of the head of the Government. There is no confusion possible in this case, of Marshals with Collectors, and of District-Attorneys with Naval Commanders; no escape from "special" inconsistencies under cover of "general" instructions. The charges of Governor WALKER are direct and to the point. They cannot be parried, nor will the country permit them to be evaded.

The New Hall of Congress.

The House of Representatives have moved into the new hall of Congress, of which we hear a good deal; but beyond the description which our own correspondent gave some time since of the manner of illuminating it at night, we have not yet seen anything in the shape of a description which gives even a tolerably clear idea of what the hall resembles. There is, from all sides, a general complaint of the gaudy ornamentation of the walls, and one letter-writer describes it as an "oblong square," but what the hall is we have yet to learn from an authentic description.

It has cost a good deal of money, and we hope it is much better adapted for the purposes of Congressional meetings than the old hall, which was most elaborately, ingeniously and successfully ill-adapted for the uses for which it was designed. It was badly lighted, ill ventilated, sombre in appearance, inconvenient for spectators, and the worst-constructed hall for acoustic effects, probably, in the world. The huge pillars that supported the ceiling, though magnificent in themselves, were entirely out of place there. The chair of the Speaker was so placed, with windows behind it, that the Speaker himself, as he sat enveloped in a cloud of crimson drapery, could hardly be seen except by those who sat close by him. The furniture was of a heavy, dull character, and the carpet—a crimson, with bright yellow stars—pained the eye by its violence of color. The general characteristics of the hall were dismal and depressing, and there was nothing in the details of the ornamentation to atone for the general effect. If the new hall wears a tolerably cheerful aspect, and regard whatever has been paid to a harmony of effect in the general arrangement, we can easily understand that it must contrast so strongly with the old hall, as to appear excessively cheery. We have the strongest confidence that the new hall cannot possibly be worse than the old one in any respect.

We are not disposed to join in the sentimental regrets at Congress moving from a hall which has resounded with the clarion tones of CLAY, and QUINCY ADAMS, and other of our great departed statesmen, which some of our cotemporaries have indulged in. We have the great deeds and the stirring words of our dead patriots still to thrill and ennoble us, if we will be ennobled by virtuous examples, and the hall which echoed their eloquence is not to be destroyed, if it is deserted. There is more that we would gladly forget of the memories of the old Congressional Hall than that we would preserve, and giving our Congress a new habitation may give them also new manners. The gaudiness of the ornaments, too, by which they are surrounded, may have the happy effect of teaching them to be more chaste and sober in their language. The gauds on the walls may be to them what the drunken helots were to the Spartan youth.

The Small-Pox Hospital.

The worst feature of all contagious and epidemic diseases is the fear they endanger. As the Turks say—where the plague kills one the fear of the plague kills five, and what the plague is in the East, the small-pox is in the West. It is important, therefore, that those who have been alarmed by the increase of this disease in certain quarters of our City, should know that every possible precaution has been taken against its extension. In another column will be found the advertisement of "The Governors of the Almshouse" in reference to the new Hospital for Small-pox Patients on Blackwell's Island. This institution is as admirably managed as it is well organized, and it offers to all classes of sufferers the best possible care and treatment, with perfect seclusion from the risk of communicating their dreadful complaint to others. Perhaps no better illustration can be found of the progress of the philanthropy than is afforded by the contrast which the modern cordon sanitaire offers to the horrible practices of mediæval and ancient times. And while New-Yorkers may justly reflect with pride upon the excellence of our own Hospital system, it is painful to think that even in many sections of our own country no such appliances exist, combining a tender regard for individual misery with a just concern for the general welfare. It was but the last Summer that the country was shocked by the gross inhumanity and worse than barbaric selfishness displayed in one of the rural districts of Massachusetts. A poor man dying with the small-pox was found lying under a hedge by the roadside, in a town called Palmer, whether he had been conveyed by the "Overseers of the Poor," from a neighboring village! The impossibility of such a transaction in our great metropolis should reconcile us to many of the annoyances and perils incident to our vaster and more complicated because more intelligent and active society.

PAUSING A LITTLE.—Some of the Democratic journals of the South hesitate a little about ejecting Senator DOUGLAS from their party, and turning him over to the uncovenanted mercies of Republicanism. The Richmond Examiner, while it assumes a ludicrously lofty tone in patronizing Mr. DOUGLAS, asks this pertinent query:

"Is there any Southern man who desires to drive Senator DOUGLAS from us by precipitate denunciation? Are we of the South so strong that we can bestring the great representative man of the North, with us few of the forms of justice, and with as little investigation as a Turkish Pacha exhibits when at a sign the head of some offending subaltern is sent spinning from his shoulders?"

We suspect there are a good many Democrats at the South which will ponder this question. None but the fire-eaters, whose leading object is the organization of a Disunion party, will be likely to ignore or underrate its suggestions.

PERSONAL.—Mr. HENRY SHELTON SANFORD, who was with Mr. GLIDDON at the time of his death in Central America, returned to this City in the Star of the West last week, just about the time when he was sent to Nicaragua by the "New-York correspondent" of a Boston paper.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—There will be a [illegible] and to-day, commencing at 2 o'clock, [illegible] opera of "Norma", with the [illegible] GRAZIANI, STRAKOSCH, BOSSARDI and GARDONI in the principal parts.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—One of the best pantomimes in the extensive repertoire of the Garden is the "Green Monster." This work was revived last night, and was welcomed with torrents of laughter and applause. ARCHER as the White Knight was as irresistibly funny as ever, and in the great tournament scene surpassed himself. The pantomime was well given in every respect. A better or funnier entertainment cannot be found in the City.

On Saturday there will be an afternoon performance, commencing at 2 o'clock, and ending in time for the afternoon trains. Our country friends should not leave the City without spending an hour at this elegant place of amusement.

A FAST NAME.—Our greyhounds, it seems, have been abroad, even more abundantly than at home. A fine clipper ship has just been launched at Boston by EMERY SAWYER, Esq., and named the Richard Busteed. She is to be commanded by Captain D. S. SEARSWOOD, of Boston, and will run in WILSON & Co.'s line of San Francisco packets. If she justifies her name, she may prove a little cranky, but she'll go ahead.

AN AMERICAN MILITARY ORDER.—Possibly everybody does not know, though everybody should, that the militia of this State have organized a Military Association, for the purpose of cultivating an honorable esprit de corps among the "gallant defenders" of our homes and hearths. The members of this Association are decorated with a badge, in the shape of a very pretty star, bearing the national emblem in a relief of gold on dark-blue enamel, and appended to a ribbon of crimson and white. These badges have heretofore been open to the objection which the English press urged against the insignia of the Bath, distributed to the French and Sardinian officers in the Crimea, that they were only Brummagem glories of bogus metal. But we were, yesterday, shown a very elegant decoration of this New-York Order of Valor, intended for presentation to General SCHUYLER by the officers of his staff, which is of altogether another guise. It is not only intrinsically valuable, but, like the eagles of the Seventy-First Regiment, exhibited at their recent dinner, is artistically worthy alike of the soldiers who offer, and of the soldier who is to receive it. These symptoms, on the part of our citizen army, of a proper pride in the emblems of their vocation, deserve to be noticed, for no calling can be useful to the community unless it is respected by those who pursue it.

TO HARLEM AND ASTORIA.—The number of passengers between this City and Astoria is now on an average by the Golden Gate, about 300 daily, yielding, at the present rate of passage, about $30 per day. This is barely sufficient to pay the current expenses of the boat, and on the first of January, when the present commutation tickets expire, the little Golden Gate will probably cease her trips. The uncertainty of communication during the Winter has caused many business men to remove to the City. Harlem, however, has the advantage of her sister village on the opposite side of the water. The Sylvan Shore continues to go and come full of passengers, averaging nearly a thousand daily. Mr. COLYER is building at his ship-yard, foot of Forty-eighth-street, a steamer to run in connection with the Sylvan Shore, to be ready in the Spring.

CHARGE AGAINST THE CITY INSPECTOR.—The Special Committee recently appointed by the Board of Councilmen to investigate the truth of the allegations contained in a petition from JAMES O'REILLEY, implicating the City Inspector and members of the Common Council, in the accusation of having received and personally appropriated moneys for the sale of stands in Washington Market, met in the City Hall yesterday—having notified and subpœnaed the said petitioner to attend. He did attend, but unequivocally refused to be sworn, alleging that he could not prove the charge himself, but that at some future day he would bring witnesses to substantiate it. The City Inspector was present, and insisted that REILLEY should be sworn and examined, but he persisted in refusing. The Committee then adjourned.

THE NEW-YORK SCOTT LEGION.—A second meeting of survivors of the different regiments which served in the Mexican War was held last evening, at the Mercer-street House. About fifty new names were enrolled, after which officers were elected, as follows:

President—Gen. WARD B. BURNETT.
Secretary—WM. B. PARRISAN.
Treasurer—FREDERICK N. COOKE.

A Committee of five, consisting of Major Farnsworth, New-York Volunteers, Capt. C. B. Wheat, Third Dragoons, Sergt. J. H. Starr, Second Artillery, and Dr. Silas Ramsey, First Regiment Ohio Volunteers, was chosen to draft a Constitution and bye-laws. The meeting adjourned till next Wednesday evening.

SUICIDE OF MR. NEEDHAM.—The Buffalo Courier makes the following statement of the causes of the suicide of Mr. NEEDHAM, lately in this City: "JOSEPH P. NEEDHAM, Jr., who committed suicide in New-York on Friday night, was a son of JOSEPH P. NEEDHAM, formerly proprietor of the Seed and Agricultural store in this city, and a brother of Mr. NEEDHAM, of the firm of J. S. VEDDER & Co. He had for the past three years been a traveling agent for a jewelry house in Boston, but had been recently thrown out of employment. He had been in this city recently on a visit to his friends, and was in ill health, suffering from dyspepsia. It is presumed that his complaint induced dejection, and that in consequence he was led to take his life. He was not in straightened circumstances. His brother has gone to New-York, and will bring his remains here for interment."

PICTURE SALE.—On Thursday Messrs. LEONS sold 120 lots of works of art at their gallery in Nassau-street. Most of them realized fair prices. There were several pleasing out-door sketches in oil, very cleanly in color, crisp, fresh and effective. Among such we noticed some desirable bits by COLEMAN, whose pictures, a few years ago, were comparatively unsalable. Nos. 66 and 67, by HART, and 42 and 43, a "Showery Day" and "Evening," by C. SMITH, were extremely pure in quality. An out-door sketch in oil—"Lake George"—sold for $11. It was well worth twice the money; painted by JOHNSON. LILLY SPENCER's "Young Husband" and "Young Wife" were probably only nominally sold. $80 each was all that was offered. $150 for each would have been nearer the mark. A large showy landscape, composition by GAROMICCHIA, realized $48.

FOUNDLINGS.—On Wednesday evening, a young woman called at the residence of PATRICK DONAHUE, No. 125½ Washington-street, having an infant child about a month old. She requested permission to leave the child for a few minutes, which was granted. But as no one came again for the child, it was handed over yesterday to the Almshouse Governors, to be taken care of.

Yesterday morning a female child, about three weeks old, was found in the entry way of the dwelling-house No. 16 East Twenty-second-street, occupied by Mr. WM. NASH. The same disposition was made of the little stranger.

There are every [illegible] this weather. They come [illegible] which, by improvement [illegible] transferred from the wells of the smacks [illegible] as they touch the deck, in order to prevent [illegible] alive and healthy. Their selling is a [illegible] and of late has not been remunerative, many of the smacks being upon the whole [illegible] without being able to save a dollar [illegible] legitimate expenses. Dead fish packed [illegible] have been brought here in large [illegible] Boston, and this has materially [illegible] their trade in many ways than one. [illegible] fish are hawked about the City in carts, [illegible] into disrepute the live, sweet and healthy [illegible] with which it is the province of the [illegible] supply the New-York market. The smacks [illegible] pay to the Corporation a yearly amount for dockage in this slip, which is regularly collected of them, and they pay it [illegible] out grumbling. When an easterly gale [illegible] it difficult to fish outside, or they are [illegible] wait for bait, a large fleet is crowded into the slip and as vessels are permitted to remain only for limited time in the stream, they are often [illegible] together so compactly that a person can [illegible] over their decks, from dock to dock. When there is no longer room there they find a temporary berth in the Black Ball slip adjoining. Packed together so closely, and filling the slip full, they find it difficult to get their [illegible] so as to hold them in position, and the swell from the wheels of passing steamers [illegible] them from their moorings, their rails are broken and their vessels chafed and damaged. There is, however, a neighborly feeling pervading among themselves, which leads them to give way to accommodate each other; they will haul out [illegible] ing to night to make way for vessels arriving with fresh fares. But occasionally a fruit sloop goes into the slip, and, after selling out, throws the refuse and rotten fruit overboard, which goes into the cars and kills the fish. To add to all these other disabilities and trials, the Harbor Masters have lately made them the subject of their special attention.

For instance, Captain ROGERS, of the smack Mary R. Rogers, on his arrival here on Wednesday afternoon, found the slip full of smacks and with much difficulty obtained a berth [illegible] of two canal boats which [illegible] great size, a ship on the north side of the slip. One of these boats being soon obliged to leave, he also was compelled to haul out and he found a berth in the adjoining (Black-Ball) slip. He had scarcely made fast to the pilot boat Mary Catherine, when "smack ahoy!" came from a voice on a ship's deck, near by. "Hello!" answered Capt. R. "Haul out that smack, and let the canal-boat in there," cried the voice, in a tone of stern authority. "Where shall we go?" inquired the smackman, "there is no berth for us to haul to." "I don't care where you go to, you must haul," answered the voice. It was after dark and Capt. ROGERS was in doubt as to who it was addressing him, and thought it might be an officer of the ship. So he inquired, "Who are you?" Answer—"I'll let you know tomorrow morning who I am," and, after a pause, "I am the Harbor Master, and I order you out of this slip." At the same instant Capt. R. heard the voice give orders to a person to go down and cast off the fasts of the smack, and if they were not [illegible] go to cut them and let her go adrift. Captain R. said he would cheerfully have hauled his smack, although it was dark, and it was very inconvenient to do so, had he been addressed in a civil way, but the command was given in so tyrannical and abusive terms, his resentment was stirred, as was also that of all who heard the language of the officer. The person who was ordered to cut the fasts said he didn't dare to go on board and cut the lines, as the men had long poles in their hands. The officer then said he would do it himself, but he was advised by the Captain that he had better not attempt that exploit. Captain R. told the harbor-master that the iron-bound hawsers of the canal-boat would cut his vessel to pieces, but the only answer to this was an order to the canal-boat to haul under the smack's bows; he didn't care now much he damaged him. Captain R. was then invited by the Captain of the steamer Croton to make fast alongside his vessel, which he did, and found a resting-place for the night.

Early yesterday morning the Harbor Master made his appearance again, and told one of the crew of the Mary Rogers, "If you are not out of this slip by 8 o'clock, I will fine you $50." A strong flood-tide was then running, and it was impossible to get out of the slip. As soon as the clock struck, the Mary Rogers was warped round into Fulton Market slip, in order to discharge her cargo of fish. When about midway he was hailed by the same familiar and authoritative voice with: "Don't haul that smack into this slip; I order you out." As there was nowhere to go, and he must either discharge his fish or lose his fare, Captain R. made fast to the nearest ship. The officer now ordered three other smacks to move from their berths. "But," said one of the smackmen, "we have a cargo of fish; what shall we do with them?" "I don't care. I will give you ten minutes to haul out, or I will fine you fifty dollars. I have supposed authority here, and I order you out." "But," said the fisherman, "suppose the tide is so I can't haul out; if I attempt it, and we get our vessel under the stern of that ship and damage her, will you be responsible?" "No; you must pay your own damage," said the officer.

In the afternoon a summons was served upon Captain R., by an attorney, to appear before the Justice of the Fourth District, on the 21st inst., for trial upon the complaint of Mr. STRANG, the Treasurer of the City Hospital, for trial, (offence not stated,) in default of which a judgment of $50 and costs would be given against him. The smackmen say they have concluded to have a little insight into their rights, and to overhaul the nature and extent of the Harbor-Masters' prerogatives. They have employed counsel for the purpose.

The Cattle Show—Appearance of the Llamas.

The attendance at the Fat Cattle Show at the Crystal Palace was much larger yesterday than on either of the previous days of the exhibition. There were many ladies and children there during the day; the little ones appeared to be especially delighted with the species of pigeons called "Fouters," of which there were a number at the exhibition. The little Maltese Goat was petted a good deal, and the Maltese Jack attracted his share of attention. But the principal interest centred in the Llamas, of which there were twelve on exhibition; the rest of the forty-two which were brought to this port on Tuesday, will be at the Palace to-day. Although these Llamas are very much wasted by the fatigues of their long rough voyage, they are so covered with wool that one does not perceive at first sight that they are very thin. The Llamas very much resemble a small camel; has a long slender neck, long ears, delicate limbs, and a coat of fine wool. Some of them at the Palace are young, and, with their Indian attendants, have quite a picturesque appearance. Although they are very much wasted by the fatigues of their long rough voyage, they are so covered with wool that one does not perceive at first sight that they are very thin. The Llamas very much resemble a small camel; has a long slender neck, long ears, delicate limbs, and a coat of fine wool. Some of them at the Palace are young, and, with their Indian attendants, have quite a picturesque appearance. [illegible] slaughtered to-day—most of the cattle [illegible] Sheep and the Llamas may still be seen there.

MASS MEETING IN FRONT OF TAMMANY HALL.

Break-down of the Platform.

MEETING IN THE PARK.

ADDRESSES AND RESOLUTIONS.

Speeches of Mr. Russell, Mr. Kellogg, Mr. Wheaton, Mr. English, Governor Gorman, Mr. Dillaye and others.

A mass meeting of the Democracy, called by a Committee, which was noticed by Mr. Seymour in a speech in Charleston, was held yesterday afternoon in the front of Tammany Hall, to consider and express an opinion on the final message of President Buchanan. The place of meeting, originally selected was Tammany Hall itself, but the Sachems refused to grant the building, on the ground that the call for the demonstration did not emanate from the regularly constituted party organization. A large platform was erected for the speakers upon the steps of the Hall and the pavement in front of the Hall was fitted up with benches, for the accommodation of those who were expected to participate in the proceedings. By 3 o'clock, the hour appointed for the meeting, a number of gentlemen had assembled on the platform, and a crowd of persons had collected in front of the Hall. A drizzling fog prevailed during the whole afternoon.

Mr. Gerard W. Ramsey called the meeting to order. He said: Fellow-Democrats, I congratulate you that we have assembled in substantial daylight, if not in Tammany Hall, or beneath the blue vault of Heaven. You are aware that the Sachems of Tammany Society have refused to the use of Tammany Hall for which to hold a meeting to respond to the policy of the Administration, as expressed in the first message of President Buchanan. They have pompously declared that no body of citizens have a right to call a meeting without first consulting those who claim to be our masters. I am strangely mistaken in the character of the upright statesman now at the head of our Government, if he does not resent this insult which has been put upon his friends, and think that disloyal Democrats that they have rejected without their host. Fellow-Democrats, I nominate as presiding officer of this meeting, Hon. RICHARD RUSSELL.

Mr. RUSSELL took his seat amid loud cheers. Mr. DANIEL E. TAYLOR presented the following list of Vice-Presidents, not one of whom, he said, would decline to serve:

| James Reed, | James D. Morgan. |

Whilst the Colonel was reading the names the platform gave way, and all upon it were precipitated, with a terrific crash, on the pile of broken bricks underneath. A scream and a scramble, and everybody congratulated himself on his safety. The injuries were confined to a few scratched shins and noses, and a broken trombone. Somebody mounted the ruins and called on the crowd to adjourn to the City Hall steps—towards which a rush was made instanter.

Colonel McCunn proceeded with the reading of the list of Secretaries, and it was unanimously approved.

Mr. STEPHEN H. DILLAYE read the annexed resolutions, which were adopted nem. con.:

Resolved, That the Democracy of the City of New-York does indorse, approve and support the Administration of JAMES BUCHANAN, President of the United States; that, in the formation of his Cabinet, whereby he rallied around him some of the ablest and most experienced statesmen of our party—men who were devoted to National principle, untainted by sectionism, and pledged by their past lives and reputation to the unimpeachable principles of the Democratic faith—he gave to the American People abundant assurance of the high character of his Administration; and that, in his noble Inaugural Address, he afforded still further evidences of the wise, safe and honorable policy, by which he would be, and has ever been, guided.

Resolved, That in President BUCHANAN's first Message, recently delivered to Congress, we recognize the sagacious statesman and a statesman, and the patriotism of a true National Democrat; and that we, in all time, place the fortunate day when the sentiments of his fellow-citizens elevated him to the high position he now fills, to position their preference, and to entertain no other recollection of country, and to cast no other sentiment to the Cincinnati Platform; and that we pledge the unflinching support of the New-York Democracy, of Democrats in Council assembled, and true men, who stand by their colors dilike good and true, and through evil report—to a citizenship as worthy of our respect and confidence.

Resolved, That we endorse the sound sentiments, and will insist without equivocation, that whenever any official holding under the Democratic Administration, or person, whether clerk or recently, whether by rule, by personal influence or by any other means, violated the constitution, the laws or the rules and regulations of the Democratic organization, his instantaneous removal from office should follow, and that we unanimously approve the prompt and fearless decision with which President BUCHANAN and his Cabinet have commenced to act upon this principle, in recent instances.

Resolved, That while we would have preferred that the entire Constitution proposed for the State of Kansas should have been submitted to popular approval, we recognize the people of that Territory upon the ground of expediency, power to form or forbid slavery, and we hold it to be a matter of congratulation that the Democratic party, in the spirit of true democracy, and in the spirit of the Cincinnati Platform, have taken the question of slavery in Kansas out of the early admission of the new State into the Union, with the unmodified power remaining in her, beneath us to frame, say upon her, that while we fully and unreservedly concur in this view of the case, we deplore the agitation, all Democrats, the necessity of conciliation and good meeting among brethren, upon this and all similar questions, that, especially upon the floor of Congress, and in the newspaper press, no asperities be engendered and no division lines drawn, which may militate against our future harmony and success—believing, as we do, that upon the ascendancy of Democratic principles mainly depend the safety and perpetuity of our Union.

Resolved, That it is remarkable contrast to the pretences which our political opponents make that the people of Kansas are deprived of the right of self-government, we point to their legislative enactments with respect to the City of New-York; that our chartered privileges and immemorial franchises, granted and respected even by British sovereigns, have been wrested from us by these identical partisans, and the voters of the first Municipality in America permitted to exercise no power for the approval or rejection of any one of the unjust acts forced upon us by a tyrannical Legislature; that the City of New-York, though oppressed beneath these burdens and grievances, stands ready with her forty-one thousand Democratic voters, to renew the battle for principle at all times, to contribute to future party triumphs, and to sustain our Democratic President.

Resolved, That the recent defeat of the Democratic Party of the City, in the venom of its ally and popular Chief Magistrate, FERNANDO WOOD, was brought about by the open treason of some, and the contumacious and indifference of others, whom our party had in times past fostered and elevated to conspicuous and influential positions; that while we regret their defection to the enemy, and accept the lesson of our separation from them as political associates which must ensue, we point with pride to the mighty phalanx of voters upon whom their assaults and exertions had no influence, and that we tender to our worthy Mayor, in his defeat, the assurance of our cordial sympathies and support.

Resolved, That we reprobate the narrow and jealous policy which induced the majority of the Sachems of Tammany Society to refuse the request of our Committee of Arrangements, and to bar out the Democratic names from Tammany Hall this evening—that we recognize no masters in the Democratic Party, and will acknowledge no right of dictation or control over our meetings; and that, especially at this moment, there should neither have been any delay nor any dictation of opinions, in giving a prompt approval of the President's position, and inviting the participation of all Democrats.

Mr. JOHN HERMAN was then introduced amid cheers. He said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: For the privilege of standing in the open air to-night, dark and cold and drear as it may be, you are indebted to the action of the Sachems of the Tammany Society, who have taken upon themselves to exclude the Democracy of the City of New-York from the halls of Tammany, where they have been accustomed to meet on all occasions. (A VOICE—"Three groans for the Sachems." Great groaning.) They have assumed to say that the Democracy of this City shall not meet within the walls of Tammany to indorse the policy of the administration of JAMES BUCHANAN, unless it be with their consent and at their call. For what they have done, gentlemen, I hope that one of these days you will thank them in your own peculiar style. (Cheers.) I thank God that, although the light of Democracy may be smothered in the smoke of the wigwam, it can burn to-night beneath the blue arch of Heaven, and that although the voice of free speech may be stifled in the pent-up air of the Sachems' cabin, it can ring out clearer and louder in the clear air of Heaven, and be wafted on its winds not only to the capitol of the nation, but to the uttermost parts of the land. (Cheers.) This meeting has been called by a number of the most respectable citizens of this great City, to indorse the policy of the Administration of JAMES BUCHANAN, as declared in his first annual message to the Congress of the Union. To that point I propose to speak. For that purpose we assemblest here. And in referring to that policy and that message, whether it be in the able review of the President upon the financial affairs of this country, and the causes and the remedies of it—whether it be upon the subject of foreign relations—whether it be upon the subject of our domestic relations—whether it be upon any one of these subjects, or upon all [illegible] and [illegible] of Kansas, [illegible] the people of this country [illegible] have to say that I would not, if I could, [illegible] or title of it, but the [illegible] precept, word for word, syllable for syllable, [illegible] for letter. I respond to it with my whole heart. (Cheers.) Why is it that this vast assemblage is here to-night? We are not upon the eve of an important election. We are on the eve of no important nominations. The grand contest in which the Democracy of this country engaged its combined foes less than a year ago, ended in a victory of the party, and placed in the Chair of State, the choice of the people, JAMES BUCHANAN. The people of the country—the Democratic Party—then adopted the theory of popular sovereignty, and the great question which was submitted to the people then was whether the question of Slavery in Kansas should be submitted to the people of Kansas? We know what a struggle took place. We know how all the political elements of this country were convulsed to a degree that was without parallel in the history of the nation. We know how every one of us trembled for the result, and feared that if defeat should overtake us ruin would overwhelm the land. And we know how when the news came from every part of the land that the Democracy had triumphed, we gloried in the result, and felt that the Administration of JAMES BUCHANAN would be a harbinger of joy. But now, in less than twelve months from the time of his inauguration, in but little over twelve months from the time of his election, there seems to be some power at work, there seems to be some organization at hand, which does have, if not as a direct, at least as an indirect aim, object and intent, the inflicting a deadly stab upon his administration. And it is proper, therefore, although we are on the eve of no election, and although no candidates are before the people, that the Democracy, without waiting for the call of organizations, without waiting for the permission of sachems, should spontaneously and of its own free will assemble here in the Empire City of the Empire State, and declare unanimously that they support the Administration. (Cheers.) Do you, fellow-citizens, give it that support? (Responsive cheers.) Do you indorse the Administration? (Cheers and cries of "Yes.") Do you indorse the policy of JAMES BUCHANAN as declared in his message? (Cheers and cries of "Yes.") Do you believe that by submitting the question of Slavery to the people of Kansas everything is submitted in which the people of this country have a vital interest? (Cries of "We do!") And when JAMES BUCHANAN says in his message—(I repeat substantially what he said)—that the whole Constitution might have been submitted to the people, yet as the vital question has been submitted, and as Kansas has always occupied more of the attention of the people of this country, and of the Congress of this country, than it should occupy, I agree with him that it is time now that their attention should be turned to something else, and that now, when this question of Slavery can be fairly submitted to them—as fairly submitted it is in pursuance of the directions of a constitutional Convention framed by the authority of a legitimate Legislature which has been recognized by the Congress of the United States—it would be trifling with the peace of the country—it would be trifling with the will of the Democracy—it would be trifling with the good sense of all men—to insist on it that that Constitution should be returned, and that the whole matter should be set afloat again among the people of Kansas to end in discord worse than any they have ever yet known—perhaps even in civil war. If the policy of JAMES BUCHANAN on the question is sustained—if, in despite of the opposition now made to it in Congress and out of Congress, that question is submitted for the vote of the people of Kansas, and Kansas shall come into the Confederacy, either with or without Slavery, as the people shall say, then, fellow-citizens, the agitation in Kansas will be ended, and we shall see, and all shall see, the wisdom of the President in recommending the course which we are now considering. Where are the friends of those who oppose JAMES BUCHANAN in this matter? They are the men, they are the presses, they are the parties, they are the leaders, who, in the battle which we fought so manfully, not twelve months ago denounced us; denounced the principle of popular sovereignty and the construction which they now put on it; denounced everything; advised the people of Kansas not to vote on the Constitution, not to vote to submit the framing of it to the Convention, and not to vote to frame that Convention, but to keep up the agitation so that it might form food and drink for them and their successors, under whatever name they might go in another Presidential campaign, whenever that should come. (Cheers. A VOICE—Speak louder.) Speak louder, you may say, but in this atmosphere to-night it is impossible for any man to do justice to the principles which are enunciated in that Message, or to do justice to the purpose for which this meeting was called. My voice is failing, my strength is failing, and craving your indulgence I must yield this stand to some one with stronger lungs, but to no one with a better will. (Loud cheers, during which Mr. HOFFMAN retired.)

Mr. T. W. McMAHON, one of Mayor Wood's private Secretaries, appeared in answer to a call for the Mayor himself. He commenced by taking for his text, I Kings, six chapter, 16th verse:

Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.

And we too, said Mr. McMAHON, have more than 40,000 Democrats who have remained true to their allegiance; and who, notwithstanding all the rascality and vagabondism and seduction that were used, stood true and firm for FERNANDO WOOD. But they were defeated notwithstanding, for all the odds and ends of the opposition were array ed against the Champion of the New-York Democracy, FERNANDO WOOD. The morning after the election Mr. McMAHON thought, when the sad intelligence was conveyed to him, that there was something for the friends of Mayor Wood to be glad about. They felt that there was no Caleb's among our ranks; no sect of theirs could make them ashamed. They had stood up manfully for Fernando Wood, the regular nominee of the Democratic Party, and they were not only the dupes and trenchers of the enemy, but those who claimed to be Democrats, called themselves Republicans, every American, every friend of Adelphia, every man who believed all who did not attend his Church would be damned, every man who believed a little beyond, and more than every man who believed a little beyond the matter of fact, was in the ranks of the enemy, and a few of those who were not in the speaker, had, he said, all combined against Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There were over 40,000 found to stand true for their rights. Notwithstanding those who claimed to be friends deserted them, and those who had been raised by the Democratic Party from the most miserable positions, attempted to smuggle the "Wooden Horse" within their camp, they were defeated by only about 1,400 votes, and those 1,400 votes were influenced by those who had refused to allow them to meet in Tammany Hall. It was a disgrace to think how many good Democrats were kept out of Tammany Hall by the eight votes that were cast at the meeting of the Sachems. It was a burning shame. Would they allow any more votes hereafter to put them down? No! they would not. If they did, then would they be as bad and worse than those who had put them down.

At this point a company, bearing a banner, on which there was a full length portrait of Mayor WOOD, and the following inscription:

SOCIETY OF THE REGULARS.

passed in front, and delayed the speaker some considerable time. At length comparative quiet was restored, and the speaker was resuming his denunciation of the enemies of Mayor WOOD, when a man in the crowd cried out, "Give us something about BUCHANAN, we've heard enough of Mayor WOOD."

The speaker continued in defence of the Mayor until a gentleman at his left (Colonel McCUNN) pulled his sleeve and said:

"Give them a little Buchanan, Mac—they would rather have it."

Mr. McMAHON said he could assure them that many of the enemies of Mr. BUCHANAN were then seeking about for means to destroy him and his Administration. But if Mr. BUCHANAN would only make a few more heads follow that of Jesse McHENRY, he would raise up a party in the City of New-York such as had not been seen since the good old days of General JACKSON. He could assert that because he had confidence in the patriotism of the New-York Democracy, and because he knew they would defend the Constitution and the Union whenever and by whomsoever they might be assailed.

Mr. THOMAS DUNN ENGLISH was introduced by the Chairman, as the next speaker. He said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS—When I received, late in the afternoon, a note of invitation from the Committee to attend the proceedings of this evening, I hesitated whether I should or should not accept it, for I found that, according to some of the newspapers of this morning, you were nothing more than a rebellious mob, broken away from the control of your masters of Tammany Hall, and set up on your own hook. But, on reflection, I considered that, if you were rebels, I was a little in that way myself, and I claimed the right to meet my fellow-citizens when and where I pleased, and exchange sentiments with them respecting the merits and demerits of any and every Administration. I respect old parties—I dearly love them. I love even the buildings associated with a time-honored party, but there are no Sachems, with their streaks of red, yellow and blue paint, and all the finnery of their Order, that can prevent me from the free, full and undisturbed expression of my opinions. We meet here this night—in this damp atmosphere, when every speaker addresses this vast assemblage, only at the peril of his throat—with a broken platform, but, thank God, with JAMES BUCHANAN at the head of affairs, at the head, not of a broken Democratic platform—we meet here, I say, with a sincere purpose to sustain a Democratic public officer in the due administration of the highest public offices. What have we now to contend with,—now that the bustle and strife, and all the angry and bitter feelings of the election are over, when Congress has just entered on its duties? What danger have we to fear? What parties to anticipate? Nothing from our enemies—nothing from those from whom we should reasonably look for opposition and antagonism, but from men in our own ranks,—from our own former highly-favored friends,—from men whom the Democracy have always delighted to honor, and who are now repaying the Democracy with the blackest ingratitude. What did this vast meeting, notwithstanding the inclement night, mean? What was the meaning of all the enthusiasm? Let the traitors think of it. Let the traitors who [illegible] consider it well. The enthusiasm of this meeting might possibly make them pause, or, at least, it would awaken them to the fate that awaits them in the future.

The speaker was here interrupted by the arrival of a torch-light procession, preceded by a band. After the members composing it had taken places on the steps, or mingled with the crowd, Mr. ENGLISH proceeded. It was not a night for much speaking, for the fog got down a speaker's throat and choked him, and as he believed that on such a night, or indeed as he always believed, that a short speech was the best, he (the speaker) had only to say that though they had been defeated in their Mayoralty election, and were only partially successful in the State election, yet he could tell them that the tide was turning in the other direction, and that on the next occasion when they tested the strength of the Democracy of New-York, the time-honored banner of Democracy would again be borne aloft, and Democratic principles would again guide the counsels of the Empire State.

Mr. ENGLISH was loudly cheered on retiring. Then arose cries for Mayor WOOD and AUGUSTUS SCHELL. Neither of these persons responding to the call, somebody shouted that Coroner CONNERY was present. Whereupon, vociferous invitations to the Coroner to address the meeting ascended into the fog, above the smoke of the torches.

Coroner CONNERY accordingly made his appearance. Fellow-citizens, (he said,) at my last appearance in Tammany Hall I proclaimed what I say has been accomplished, the triumph of the Democracy of New-York. I said then, what I say now, and the last end of my existence, within the limits of my education, will say, that every means at my disposal, all my energy and strength and vital endurance, and everything about me, shall be exercised against every man who opposes the interests and the sinews of the workingmen of the City and County of New-York. When I was last in Tammany Hall I so said, and though that inquisition has been laughed at since, I claim that it has been verified in every feature. I said we would have a majority for the Democratic Party, and we have had it, and if we will continue to persevere, we shall yet have as glorious victories as the glorious JACKSON, the representative of Democracy, would rejoice in. I appear here to-night, because I want to throw myself into every avenue of Democracy. I trust the air which I drew in as a young man will still sustain by its oxygen the lungs of EDWARD DOWNES CONNERY. I will tell this inquisition that any other form of Government but Democracy is totally impossible in this country, for Democracy is a great and grand tree, that should by its branches protect every Democrat throughout the length and breadth and entire extent of the Union of America. I am one of the public officers of New-York, not afraid to appear here, for I am here to give my approbation to every action of JAMES BUCHANAN, your President. I will not go over the Kansas matters—there is no occasion that I should. I appear before you to inspirit you to the glorious actions of your fathers, which, if you forget, by and by your children will suffer for it. I bid you cherish those noble principles which were taught you by JEFFERSON, and glorious old JACKSON, and all the really great men of this country. Do not be led away by those who want you to give your votes for any particular purpose. Those who want you to vote for any particular purpose, will promise everything that man can bestow, but after the election is over you will find the falsity of those professions.

In conclusion, Coroner CONNERY assured the meeting that in Mayor WOOD they had a public officer unrivalled in energy, ability and talent—a man who had been put through the crucible, and had discharged with surpassing fidelity and admirable honesty, the duties which had been imposed upon him by the people. We have arrived, he said, at an epoch in the political history of New-York, when men must do their duty to the utmost—when every Ward in the City must have its own intrinsic power—when every individual must have the prerogative to choose such men as he desires to be the makers and administrators of the laws he desires to obey—when we must not be ruled by an Albany junta—by a few men out of the City. There were good men among them, in the ranks of the true Democracy—not the traitors—and one of the foremost of them was that true friend of the people, AUGUSTUS SCHELL.

Three cheers were given for Coroner CONNERY on his retiring.

Again arose loud cries for Mayor WOOD, but as he was not forthcoming, the Chairman announced Mr. STEPHEN H. DILLAYE.

Fellow-Democrats, (he began,) we have assembled here to night for the purpose of expressing our sentiments respecting the principles enunciated in the first message of JAMES BUCHANAN. Let them contrast the state of the country to-day with its state just preceding the election of that great statesman, and they would see that there was nothing were worthy their commendation then was its present attitude. From the moment that JAMES BUCHANAN entered upon his Presidential duties, every step he had taken, every movement he had made, had only tended to raise higher and higher the dignity of the United States, and to throw around their commerce all that was required to keep it from agitation. It was not surprising that the crowd of thousands upon thousands, which had assembled upon such an inclement night, should have met to sustain such an Administration; but it was surprising that seven men had dared, in the face of Heaven and the Democracy, to shut the doors of Tammany Hall against the people, unless they were called together by that secret society which claimed to rule them—that oligarchy of secondrels. For his (the speaker's) part, he said War! War against all secret societies. (Loud cheers.) And especially against such a secret society as had closed the Wigwam against them. He preferred war to the servility of slavery. The same hand that had shut them out of Tammany, was the same hand that went to the polls, two weeks ago, and murdered the people's candidates, and for as the defeating him was concerned. Would they allow Tammany Hall to usurp their rights, and dictate to them what sort of men they should vote for? (NO! NO!) We meet to-night to consider more particularly matters here, but we will [illegible] them, to a man, whether or not they have prevented the Democracy of New-York from [illegible] (Yes! Yes!) If they did that—and he was sure he could point to a number—they would do it—would they not also denounce the action of the Seven Sachems, in denying Tammany Hall for their meeting for that purpose? Is there any act in the State which prevents people from assembling and stating their views on any political question? There was none; and, for his part he would denounce the seven Sachems of Tammany Hall till they were driven from the party to which they claimed to belong.

Mr. SWACKHAMER was next called for, but as he was not present, another gentleman, whose name we did not learn, briefly addressed the meeting. The crowd dropped away in groups of a dozen at a time, till shortly after 9 o'clock, the steps of the Hall were nearly deserted, and the meeting came to an end.

There was some speaking at the stand in the Park, after that in front of the new Tweed Building had fallen in. The meeting there was organized by the appointment of Aldermen Connors at Chairman. On taking the Chair he remarked briefly and with considerable severity upon the conduct of those who were not disposed to encourage the objects of assemblage. Several speakers followed. Among them, Mr. HERRMANN spoke with much energy against the enemies of the true Democracy. And so did Alderman WEISSE and at greater length. He was listened to with apparent favor, until he made an unfavorable allusion to Senator DOUGLAS, at which cheers were many hissed.

Mr. McSWEENY was the last speaker. He denounced the action of the eight Sachems of Tammany who had denied them the use of Tammany Hall, and praised Mr. TUCKER, who alone voted against their resolutions. He spoke admiringly of Mr. BUCHANAN, and of his Administration hopefully. In conclusion, he moved that the meeting adjourn, and that they proceed to the St. Nicholas Hotel and pay their respects to Mayor WOOD. They adjourned accordingly at a quarter to nine o'clock.

A portion of the crowd had already left the Park, preceded by a brass band, and marched up Broadway to the St. Nicholas Hotel. Arrived there, the band played a martial air, and then there were loud calls for WOOD. But Mr. WOOD did not make his appearance, and after waiting a few moments the band struck up another martial air, and with the crowd marched away. The gathering in front of the hotel was very small.

Fires.

FIRE IN CHERRY-STREET.—SEVEN HORSES BURNED.—At 5 o'clock yesterday morning, a fire broke out in the frame stable rear of No. 276 Cherry-street. The stable was entirely destroyed, and seven horses burned. The fire was caused by the carelessness of a drunken hackman.

FIRE IN HOUSTON-STREET.—At a few minutes after 5 o'clock A. M. yesterday, a fire occurred in the dwelling-house No. 2 Houston-street. A servant girl went into a clothes closet with a lighted candle, and the flame communicated to the clothing. Fortunately it was speedily extinguished, with the destruction of only a few dresses.

FIRE IN EIGHTY-FIFTH-STREET.—A little before noon, Wednesday, a fire broke out in the bakery of Mr. STRANG, in Eighty-fifth street, near Third-avenue. The flames extended to the blacksmith shop of ROBERT KIRKPATRICK adjoining. Mr. STRANG sustained a loss of about $300, which is covered by an insurance of $1,500 in the Rutger Insurance Company. Agent for Herring & Co.'s Patent Safes:

DEAR SIR: The Herring Champion Safe that I purchased of you, was in my store at the time it was burned last March. The heat was so great that it melted off the brass plates and knob on the front of the safe. The door was warped so badly from the heat that I was obliged to cut it open. But I am happy to say to you, the contents of the safe were preserved to my perfect satisfaction.

Mr. Wilson presented the resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, taking that that State be reimbursed for money advanced the United States during the war of 1812.

Mr. Pearce introduced a bill to improve the navigation of the Falls of the Ohio River.

Mr. Clay introduced a bill to repeal all laws allowing bounty lands.

Mr. Hunter, from the Committee on Finance, reported a Treasury Note bill.

Mr. Hunter asked its immediate consideration, and caused to be read a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in which it is stated that there is in the warehouses, at New-York, merchandise to the amount of twenty-eight millions of dollars, on which the duties to be paid will be more than six millions; there are now in the Treasury, subject to call, less than six millions of dollars, and the expenses of Government are daily reducing this amount; therefore, authority should forthwith be given for the issue of twenty millions of Treasury notes. Mr. Hunter said this bill corresponded with that of 1847, with the exception that there is no provision for funding the debt; and another difference is as to the mode of paying the interest.

The bill was read. It authorizes the President to cause notes to be issued as the exigencies of the public service may require, but not to exceed at any time the amount of twenty millions, nor to be of a less denomination than fifty dollars, the notes to be paid and redeemed at the Treasury after the expiration of one year from the dates of each notes, until they shall be respectively redeemed; they shall bear such rates of interest as shall be expressed in said notes, which rates of interest upon the first issue, which shall not exceed six millions of dollars, shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approbation of the President, but shall in no case exceed six per centum per annum; the residue shall be issued in whole or in part, after public advertisement of not less than thirty days, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, by exchanging them at their par value for specie to bidders who shall agree to make the exchange, at the lowest rate of interest, not exceeding six per centum per annum; provided that after the maturity of said notes, the interest thereon shall cease at the expiration of sixty days' notice of readiness to pay and redeem the same, which may at any time be given by the Secretary of the Treasury; payment on the redemption of such notes shall be made to the lawful holders thereof respectively upon presentment at the Treasury, and shall include the principal of such note and interest which may be due thereon. The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged for the prompt payment of the notes, and no notes shall be hypothecated, sold or disposed of in any way, for any purpose whatever, either directly or indirectly, at any price less than the amount of such notes, including principal and interest; the notes shall be transferred by an assignment indorsed thereon by the persons to whose order the same shall be made payable, accompanied by the delivery of notice that they have been so assigned; the notes are to be received by the proper officers in payment of all debts and taxes levied by the authority of the United States, and in payment for public lands, and on every such payment credit shall be given to the amount of the principal and interest due on such notes, on the day when they shall have been received by such officers; authority is given to purchase said notes at a proper amount for principal and interest at any time. The remainder of the bill relates to details, provides penalties for forgery, and appropriates $50,000 to carry it into effect.

Objection being made to the consideration of the bill now, Mr. Hunter gave notice that he would call it up to-morrow.

Before proceeding to the election of Printer Mr. Johnson, of Arkansas, offered a proposition that the printer receive the contract on condition that Congress have the right to repeal or modify all existing laws relative to public printing, and no loss or damages to the person by reason of such modification or repeal shall be allowed as constituting any claim or indemnity against Congress.

The proposition was agreed to, and the Senate then balloted for Printer.

Mr. Harris, of the Union, received 36 votes, and Cornelius M. Wright 16. Scattering, 3 votes.

Mr. Harris was then declared elected.

Mr. Durkee, before the result was announced, said that he had declined to vote, for reasons satisfactory to himself.

The Senate went into Executive session, and shortly afterwards adjourned.

News From Kansas.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATURE—THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION AT LECOMPTON, ETC.

St. Louis, Thursday, Dec. 17.

The Republican has Kansas dates of the 10th inst. The Legislature has done nothing towards carrying out the recommendations in Secretary Stanton's Message. The election returns of Kickapoo had been declared fraudulent by a Committee of Investigation, and the Republican members admitted to their seats in the House.

The Democratic Convention at Lecompton nominated John Calhoun, for Governor, by acclamation, but he declined to accept, and Frank Marshall was nominated in his stead; W. G. Matthews, for Lieutenant-Governor, and Mr. Carr, for Congress. District-Attorney Wade declined a nomination to Congress.

General Denver had not arrived in the Territory.

Kansas letters to the Democrat say that an attempt is being made in the border counties of Missouri to form companies of voters to control the election on the 21st inst.

At a mass Convention held at Lecompton on the 7th instant, resolutions were passed, indorsing the proceedings of the Delegate Convention held at Lawrence on the 2d instant, and pledging themselves individually and collectively to oppose, to the utmost, the Constitution adopted at Lecompton, and resist every attempt made to put the Government in operation under the same.

Nothing is yet known as to the character of the intelligence brought by the last messenger from Utah.

THE MEETING OF THE KANSAS LEGISLATURE.

From the St. Louis Republican, Dec. 14.

The train from Jefferson City last night brought down a very large number of passengers from the upper part of this State and Kansas. Many of them arrived at Jefferson on the Florida, from St. Joseph.

The Legislature met on the 7th, but there was no quorum present, and there was an adjournment to the next day.

On Tuesday there were eleven members present in the Council, and twenty-one in the House. The Council organized by electing C. W. Babcock President, J. K. Goodwin Secretary, G. A. Colton Assistant Secretary, D. H. Wise Engrossing Clerk, and divers other officers. In the House, G. W. Deitzler was elected President, C. F. Currier Chief Clerk, and a full set of officers.

We hear from the Territory that there was intense excitement among all classes of people, and it is hardly probable that the party opposed to the Lecompton Convention will permit an election to be held on the 21st at all. Jim Lane, with three or four hundred of his myrmidons and followers, was encamped near Lecompton, ostensibly to keep the peace, but really to overawe, as it seems to us, the members of the Legislature, and to secure such action as they desire with reference to the Lecompton Constitution. Many threats of a determination to drive Gen. Calhoun, and all the members who were concerned with him in the formation and submission of the Constitution, out of the Territory, and even to take their lives, have been made, but no outbreak of this kind had been attempted.

News of the dismissal of Mr. Secretary Stanton, and of the appointment of General Denver in his stead, had not reached Kansas, but the impression of our informant is, that it will bring things to an issue in the Territory at once. Perhaps when they find that the President has adopted his course, and will employ all the means at his command to sustain the legally constituted authorities and enactments, they may hesitate about bringing matters to a bloody termination, as they declare they will do, "regardless of consequences."

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Re-establishment of the Constitutional Government—Speech of the President—Defeat of the Rebels at Puebla—The Civil War in Yucatan, &c.

From the N. O. Picayune, Dec. 11.

The United States Mail steamship Tennessee, Capt. Forbes, from Vera Cruz the 7th inst., reached her wharf at an early hour yesterday afternoon, having crossed the bar at five in the morning. Advices are two weeks later, and of great interest and importance, as indicating the reestablishment of Congress's Government, temporarily at least, and the discomfiture of the Reactionary party—the result of the opportune grant to the Executive of dictatorial powers.

A severe norther prevailed on the Mexican coast when the Tennessee left, in consequence of which, we suppose, and the difficulty of communicating with the town, we are without usual Vera Cruz papers of the morning of the 7th, and advices from the capital later than the evening of the 3d—the Extraordinary having failed to connect.

The political intelligence principally concerns the reestablishment of Congress's Government, and the apparent restoration of order throughout the Republic, the happy result of the revival of the Dictatorship—events marked and distinguished by the formal acknowledgment by the President of his election, and his acceptance of the high trust reposed in him. The ceremonies took place on the 1st instant, and were performed, says the Extraordinary, "with all due solemnity, and in the presence of many who have, doubtless, been wavering in their opinions as to the courage of President Comonfort to take hold of the reins of the Government of Mexico as its constitutional ruler. The following is the

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

Gentlemen of the Chamber of Deputies:

Elevated by the free vote of the people to the highest dignity that can be established by a republic, I have invoked the Supreme Ruler of the universe to judge the intentions with which I accept the high trust that the nation has been pleased to honor me with; and the gratitude which I owe for this distinction will be as lasting as my existence. For a long time, 'tis true, I have hesitated whether to accept if, after meeting with so much bitterness during the tempestuous epoch which befell the last provisional Administration, and I have only come to a determination by considering that in the truly difficult situation of public events, it was not a worthy return on my part to avoid lending my aid in compliance with the general desire of the country. I have thought it my duty to make new sacrifices in its favor, and make use of every possible means for its salvation.

The most efficacious of them all will be to make salutary and useful reforms to the fundamental code. With that object, the Government will soon place before you the initiatives which it may think necessary; and it confidently trusts that they will be resolved by your wisdom, with that promptness and prudence which the dearest interests of society demand.

The loyalty with which I have fulfilled the promises of the revolution of Ayutla, leads me to suppose that my indications will be listened to. Believe me, gentlemen, it is not sufficient for the happiness of the Republic that its victorious arms should put down the reaction now in arms; the country, above all, wants the enjoyment of a firm and well-established peace; and he that may succeed in giving it this priceless benefit, will be entitled to the blessings of posterity. God grant that this glory may be yours!—I have said.

The speech was received with the most rapturous applause, in the midst of which the President retired. Señor Juarez, the Chief Justice, and others, likewise took the oath of office the same day, and the old Government, with a new lease of life, (till May next, according to the terms of the dictatorship,) would seem to be well started again, though it is not yet apparent where the money is to come from.

The particular event, alluded to in the President's address, as a subject of congratulation, and which seems, for the moment, to have quelled the revolutionary spirit, is the defeat and utter rout of the revolutionists at Puebla, where, at our last previous advices, they promised to give the Government serious trouble. The Extraordinary, 28th ult., says:]

DEFEAT OF THE PUEBLA REBELS.

The reactionists have again met with a most complete discomfiture, that should tell home with power upon the minds of the breeders of disorder in the land. The cloud that hung over the position of the Government at Puebla, when our last issue went to press, has been driven away like mist before a hurricane. General Echeagaray, after driving the reactionists from Puebla, lost no time in following them up, and from the particulars before us sweep down upon them with Assyrian impetuosity, and has broken up their entire force, routed them with great loss, and taken about one hundred prisoners.

The reports of the engagement give the loss of the reactionists as eighty-five killed and one hundred prisoners, with the capture of all their principal munitions and arms. The defeat has been complete and overwhelming, and thus we see that, no matter how much the Government is threatened, its arms, by some grand cause, drive everything before them, and the clouds of to-day pass away to-morrow.

The official report of the engagement puts down the number of prisoners at 225, the wounded at 40, in addition to the 85 killed. Three field-pieces, and 130 muskets were captured. The revolutionists retired in great confusion. Their number is estimated at about 3,000 men, some 700 on horseback, "a mounted rabble." The Government troops numbered about 2,000 men, among them 100 well-organized cavalry, whose charge threw the revolutionists at once into great confusion. The engagement took place near the ancient town of Cholula. The victory was complete, and had not the Government troops been fatigued by a long march, the rebels would have been completely annihilated.

The fortifications temporarily raised for the defence of the city of Puebla are now being demolished, and families are returning to their homes, but the city has a desolate air, and commerce is completely paralyzed.

We regret to learn that our friend, Wm. Moran, Esq., editor of the Extraordinary, is still in prison, "not admitted to bail," for his offence against the press law. "Considering that the publication was made while the Law-Lafragua was not in force," (he writes on the 1st inst.,) "according to a decision in another case, and furthermore, that every proper reparation has been offered, our case must soon command more positive attention."

The Santa Anist journal, the Tiempo, has also rendered itself obnoxious to the Government, and been mulcted in the sum of $1,000, in default of which the establishment has been seized and publication suspended.

The Pacific mails, from Acapulco, finally came through to the capital on the 1st inst.—"dates several months old."

The Vera Cruz conducta was to leave the capital the morning of the 7th.

The news of the arrival of Santa Ana's family at Havana had reached the capital, where it created considerable excitement. Rumors of a Spanish expedition to the coast, headed by the ex-Dictator, were, of course, again in circulation. In connection with this subject, it is mentioned that the indefatigable ex-Governor Bax has been sent on a special mission of importance to the coast.

The Vera Cruz road is now, especially between that port and Orizava, in very bad order, though the diligence still continues to make the trip pretty regularly in three days. The telegraph, also, was for a time down, cut, both poles and wires, by the Puebla rebels, and a large quantity of the latter stolen, but it had been gotten to work again.

There were rumors at the capital of the success of the Government in negotiating a loan, as authorized by the terms of the Dictatorship, but no particulars as yet given.

The custom-house rules and regulations for the Isthmus Transit route have been issued from the proper Department. They are framed in accordance with the terms of the new concession, and do not differ from other similar regulations.

The political state of the Republic having become more settled, the famous annual fair of San Juan de Los Lagos, has at last been specially authorized, to the great joy of the people, and everybody at the capital is preparing for what has long been a national festival.

THE LATE CONSPIRACY AT TAMPICO.

The Vera Cruz papers are filled with detailed accounts of this singular "treasonable attempt." They add very little, however, to the information already before the reader, except that the "attempt" and subsequent arrest so unsettled and excited the popular mind that it became necessary to proclaim martial law on the 25th, which still prevails. A rumor of a second conspiracy and general uprising of the people had reached Vera Cruz, but it is contradicted by the latest, which left Tampico on the 4th, when all was quiet.

The leader of the conspiracy, who indeed planned and conducted all its movements, was one Lieut. Juan Carrera, well known as a violent partizan of the Santa Ana school. The plot was a most murderous one, and contemplated the assassination, not only of Gov. Monzon, but of all the principal officers of the State. And it was only prevented from being carried into execution by the accidental escape from the supper room of a portion of the Governor's staff, who immediately putting themselves at the head of such troops and citizens as were in the neighborhood, overpowered the conspirators, and succeeded finally in making them all prisoners.

The prisoners are 27 in number, and most of them hold or have held honorable rank in the army. As to their disposition, it is mentioned that some will be sent to the Tuxpan prison, and others banished to Tuxtan, where they will doubtless find at present a good field for their enterprise.

THE CIVIL WAR IN YUCATAN.

Our advices from the Peninsula, by this arrival, are no later, but fuller than those previously at hand. It is difficult to conceive a more horrible state of things than now exists in this distracted country, the prey alike of political feuds and barbarous savages, especially at Campeachy, where, for the present, all the violence of this most unnatural war is concentrated. No quarter is given or asked on either side, by besieger or besieged. As substance of the horrible atrocities there committed, it is mentioned that one of the citizens of the town, having, in a sortie, fallen into the hands of the besiegers, he was instantly, by order of the commanding officer, shot and nailed, hands and feet, to a large wooden cross, and then actually crucified in front of the fortifications of the city, some hundred yards abreast of the works of the besiegers, and in full view of his family and friends therein.

As to the result of the siege and with it that of the revolution, latest Campeachy papers, the 26th ult., do not speak with much confidence. The besieged are strongly fortified, and have abundance of ammunition, powder and shot, whence supplied is not stated, but they are the prey of a dreaded famine. Men, women and children alike are reduced to the last necessity. Starvation, or surrender to a barbarous enemy, seems the only alternative. "God protect us," says the daily journal, which still continues to record the woes of the unhappy people.

Police Intelligence.

A Missing Girl Found—Singular Case.—Annie Carr, a girl 16 years of age, disappeared from her home, No. 15 West-street, about four weeks since, in a very mysterious manner. Her parents, (Irish, of the laboring class,) sought for her in vain, and finally made the circumstances known to the Deputy Superintendent of Police, who instructed Detective Officer Bennett to seek for the missing girl. The officer set about the work at once, and continued at it for several weeks. His efforts were finally crowned with success. Yesterday morning he found the girl in a private, fashionable and respectable boarding-house in the upper part of Broadway, and conveyed her at once to the Police Office in Broome-street, where she acknowledged her name. She stated that her board had been paid at the boarding-house by "a young lawyer," whose name she refused to give; that she had been driven from her home by the cruelty of her parents, who, because she would not attend the Catholic Church, restrained her of her liberty and subjected her to many other hardships. Her mother and sister were sent for, and on their arrival an affecting scene occurred. The mother entreated her daughter to return, promising that if she did so she should be used with the greatest tenderness. Annie, however, positively refused, notwithstanding every entreaty. She said, however, that she would go into the country, or go anywhere that the Deputy Superintendent might recommend, but home she would not go. The mother and sister went home weeping bitterly; Annie remained behind in care of Officer Bennett.

Theft and Recovery of a Diamond Ring—A Curious Case.—A few weeks ago Mrs. Bernard Van Rensselaer, of Albany, while shopping in Broadway, had her pocket picked of a purse containing about $50 in money, and a diamond ring valued at $300. The store was crowded with ladies at the time, but as Mrs. Van Rensselaer had been nearly an hour in the store before missing her purse, and judging that the one who had abstracted it from her pocket had wisely left immediately following the theft, she did nothing further than to notify the proprietors of the store of her loss. The next day the loss of the ring and a description of it was advertised in several papers, and a reward offered for its recovery. Stimulated by the reward several ex-members of the police and others sedulously exerted themselves to find out the guilty parties and recover the valuable piece of jewelry. Not the slightest clue was, however, obtained to the missing property until a day or two ago, and this happened by a very lucky chance. Officers Roach and Albertson, of the Sixteenth Ward Police, on Tuesday afternoon took a look into a liquor saloon in Ninth-avenue, known as "Cockney Dan's" place. Shortly after they had taken their seats, two women came into the place and entered into a lively chat with Cockney Dan. During the conversation one of them withdrew a glove from one of her hands, but instantly put it on again. She had it removed long enough for the sharp eye of Officer Roach to discover a brilliant diamond glittering on one of her fingers. The suspicion of the officer was aroused, and when the woman left, he left also, accompanied by Officer Albertson. As soon as the female visitors had got a few blocks away, the officers walked up to them and demanded permission to see the ring. The request was refused point blank, as being an impertinent demand. The officers were not to be repulsed by a refusal, however, but arrested them forthwith and took them to the Station-house. At the Station-house the ring was produced and found to correspond exactly with the description of the one lost. The woman in whose possession it was found declared that "her man" purchased it for her in England, and that she could prove it as her property, stating her determination to furnish the required proof. The ring was left in Captain Carpenter's hands, and the woman allowed to depart.

Inquiry was made at once about the women, and it was soon found that they were known as "Manchester Moll" and "Cockney Moll," the former being the mistress of a man named Henry Field, and the latter the mistress of "Cockney Dan," alias Dan Sweeney. Inquiry was also made at the jewelry store of Tiffany, Young & Ellis, in Broadway, to see if they knew anything about the ring, as it was declared in the advertisement to have been sold from this establishment. They identified it at once as the one sold by them to Mrs. Van Rensselaer.

The same evening, following the recovery of the ring, Henry Field and a clerk in the Deputy Sheriff's Office, came to the Station-house and demanded the ring of Captain Carpenter, but with a different result than the one anticipated. Field was arrested and the clerk let off on a promise to intermeddle no further in the affair. Field promised if they would let him off to stop his intermeddling in the case, but the promise had no weight.

Yesterday, Mrs. Van Rensselaer having been telegraphed for, came to the City from Albany, and identified the ring as hers. In the afternoon Field was taken before Justice Davison and locked up for examination. Officers have been dispatched in search of the two women, and it is probable they will speedily be arrested.

Thursday, Dec. 17—P. M.

Whatever doubts may have been felt in any well-informed quarter last week, in regard to the virtual return of the banks here and in New-England to full cash payments, have already given away this week to the general desire to turn the measure to the greatest possible good. In one point of view it comes most timely. The Banks, with cash payments, also resume at once, and in good season for the shopping trade of the approaching holidays, their full half-yearly dividends. The item is an important and cheering one to nearly fifty thousand shareholders in and around this City alone, and the same effect runs through the State, and through five of the six New-England States. The disbursement is not only timely and almost in the nature of a public charity on the eve of the holidays, and the prospect of a hard Winter, but will diffuse itself through almost every channel of the shopping trade. Adding this to the other dividend disbursements which are sure to come with the New Year, from the Federal and State Treasuries, the Savings Banks, Insurance Companies, and most of the leading Railways on their Bonds, we have an aggregate disbursement for the half-yearly income upon the productive money capital of the people, not short of ten millions dollars. To this, the City Banks that pay in January and July will contribute not less than one million of dollars, which they could not, in good conscience, have paid under suspension. To this extent the holiday trade in this City has been encouraged by the measure of last Saturday.

Another good has been accomplished. The Banks are now overhauling their folios and reviewing critically and impartially their suspended and doubtful paper, preliminary to their half-yearly dividends. The result, as far as we are advised, is most gratifying, showing infinitely less real bankruptcy in an aggregate discount line of nearly one hundred millions, cut down from $122,000,000, than the sudden fierceness of the panic in September and October, and its damaging effects upon bank credit and mercantile enterprise and collections, led the shareholders to anticipate. The City Bank Capital, as reduced by the liquidation of the Bowery, East River, Grocers' and Mechanics' Association, now stands at $64,419,000. The surplus undivided on the last quarterly statement, was $7,583,000, or an average of 12 ₩ cent. on the capital. The losses thus far counted in) the Wall-street Banks (so called from their more immediate connection with the commerce of the country at large, than the up-town banks) will not amount to one-half this surplus. The other banks probably stand quite as well on this point. Of course this calculation is made on the policy of gradual and judicious liquidation, and the determination of the Banks not only to maintain their own credit sound for future transactions, but to help every old dealer out of embarrassment who is not hopelessly bankrupt. We may also mention in the same connection, that the four Banks in liquidation are turning out much better for their shareholders than anticipated. Two of them have already paid off their depositors and note-holders. The other two have paid off a large portion of the claims outstanding at the time of suspension. And the remaining assets, in every instance, we hear, are much larger and sounder than any one ventured to rely upon sixty days ago.

All these facts afford another and very striking commentary upon the singular nature of our late panic, and the great misunderstanding which permitted it to rouse the distrust and create the fears of the whole country for the soundness of trade and the integrity of the banking system.

The day has been without interest in the Money and Exchange markets. The absence of later foreign news to the close of 'Change has created a dull feeling in these departments of business. The case is different in the Stock Exchange, where the market hourly gains strength, and prices have further advanced on nearly all the active securities. Several of the Railroad Stocks were considerably oversold during the dull and indifferent market of last week, and the Bear purchases for delivery help the Bulls in realizing on their low-priced purchases. The State Stocks feel the influence of the near approach of the half-yearly dividends. These have nearly all been provided in advance in this City. The Bank of Commerce is in funds for Missouri; the Republic for Virginia; the State Agent, Mr. Bolt, will be ready for Ohio, and the usual arrangements for Kentucky, Alabama, Tennessee, &c., will no doubt be announced in good season. The Coal shares are in improved request: Delaware and Hudson, 107, ex-dividend; Pennsylvania Coal is up to 66¼@67, in anticipation of the resumption of moderate dividends in February; Reading, 53½@53¾. The general market this afternoon leaves off firm for the Railway shares; New-York Central, 76¼@76¾; Erie, 17¼; Michigan Southern, 23; Toledo, 43¾; Rock Island, 76¼@77; Galena, 75¾; the dealings evincing considerable buoyancy. The average additions rise since yesterday is nearly 1 ₩ cent.

The Treasury Note Bill will soon pass both Houses of Congress, and receive the signature of the President. It is a mistake to suppose that the process of engraving will long delay the issue of the first installment of the Notes. This matter we presume has been looked after in advance. As regards the rate of interest, we have reason to believe that it will not exceed 3 ₩ cent. ₩ annum, unless the Secretary has been overruled in his wishes on the subject within a few days past. There are financial jobbers, of course, who would like to have the rate 4, 5, or even 6 ₩ cent., to open the way to a contract for the whole issue. But the public require no such rate to induce the free currency of the Notes, nor ought the Secretary to use any other agency for distributing the issue than his own Treasurer at Washington and Sub-Treasurers at the great
